Guns For U. S. in 1837

Henry E. Leman, who had his summer residence at Mount Joy on the Leman farm, half a mile north of town during the Civil War, gained great popularity as a rifle manufacturer. His works were located in the continuance of the war and the extra necessary machinery required to produce them on short notice. He, however, repaired a large number for the government by changing flint lock guns to percussion cap rifles.

Mr. Leman's rifles were the first to reach the Far West and the Pacific coast. There were few sporting rifles at that time that had a more extended sale or were more widely known than those manufactured at the Leman Rifle Works.
