

Life's Problems Are Discussed

By Mrs. Wilson Woodrow

I read a book not long ago in which the writer had permitted himself some comparisons, not necessarily odious, of man and woman.

"Man," he asserts, "is given to all the boyish, vagrant, visionary things of building and exploring and destroying. Woman has a hard raven-ousness for clean-cut, tidy things. Woman is not a sentimentalist; she is clear, defined."

Personally, I am always inclined to disagree with those statements of fundamental mental differences in the sexes. I believe that, bar training and tradition, men and women are very much alike. Nevertheless, I do think the remark about woman's "hard raven-ousness for clean-cut, tidy things" is a stroke of genius.

If you will consider the matter, you will realize that true feminine efficiency is of a high order. As an example, women have shown themselves to be remarkable mechanical workers. The rapidity with which they master the intricacies of machinery has been regarded as almost phenomenal.

When the Woman's Committee of National Defense say that although all the women of that body had large and important interests of their own upon which they had concentrated for years, they instantly put these aside with all the responsibility entailed when the call came.

And in both the men who are devoting their time to this task of organization and the women too, there is noticeable a simplicity of outlook and a singleness of aim. They wasted no time in looking else to answer that imperative summons—the call of country.

A case in point is the doctors who have responded so heartily. Many of them are leaving large practices, with the corollary of large incomes, and are giving their services for an indefinite time for a comparatively trifling, monetary return.

I heard a member of the Woman's Committee of the Council of National Defense say that although all the women of that body had large and important interests of their own upon which they had concentrated for years, they instantly put these aside with all the responsibility entailed when the call came.

And in both the men who are devoting their time to this task of organization and the women too, there is noticeable a simplicity of outlook and a singleness of aim. They wasted no time in looking backward or forward; there was no weighing of possibilities. They were summoned. They went. There was nothing else to do.

I have always believed in women's special talent for organization. They have shown it wherever they have had an opportunity, and I believe that with all the various organizations working with the national committee there will be demonstrated a clock-like precision and efficiency, and such a showing of results as will make even those who expect much of the women of the country to sit up and wonder.

There will also be a tremendous sifting of material. Every woman will find her own particular niche where her special aptitude may best be utilized.

For example, the other day I heard of a young girl whose mother was informing every one with a mingling of pride and anxiety that

Ethel expected to be "somewhere in France" by the first of September. Fired with patriotic ardor by the example of her cousin, Paul, who is leaving shortly for the training camp at Plattsburg, Ethel had determined to go as an ambulance nurse, and since the family had influential connections, she had been practically promised that she should be sent with the first American advance.

But it happened that Cousin Paul managed to cut his hand rather badly, and when the doctor arrived he found that a bit of surgery would be necessary. Turning to Ethel, he asked her to assist him by holding Paul's arm. And Ethel, overcome by the sight of the blood and the instruments, promptly fainted.

In a tableau or at amateur theatricals, Ethel would probably make a very fetching picture in the gray habit of the Red Cross nurse, but I do not think she would shine in a field hospital.

We've got a grim and serious business before us in this war, and we've got to go about it in a business-like way. We can't use butterfly nurses, or butterflies in any other capacity.

Perhaps the most useful, if not the most picturesque, advice that we can take to ourselves at this juncture is that tendered by the government to the alien enemies among us: "Go about your business, and keep your mouths shut."

We women of America have a greater patriotic opportunity in our hands than perhaps some of us realize. Ours is the chance, in spite of the shock and turmoil of war, to keep our national life on an even keel.

For the great majority of us the oven-door must be our firing line, and the trenches to be held against invasion the petty details of household expenditure. They must learn the thrift which makes waste a crime, and yet does not mean the foolish, panic retrenchment unsettling to business.

It is a fine thing and a patriotic thing to "do one's bit" in the actual service of one's country, or by helping along in the work of the various movements and relief funds, or by cultivating a garden and conserving the food supply.

But it is just as fine and just as patriotic to keep the American home up to standard and American business going as usual.

Italian Censor Baffled

Over New Code Discoveries

Rome, June 11.—The Italian Censors Office has been baffled for two years in an effort to discover the meaning of little groups of letters and dashes, such as "axyz-wty" and so on, which appear at the ends of news items sent out by the Associated Press from there to the Associated Press correspondents from whom the items came. These marks are the initials of the writer, editor, or manifold of the item, but apparently the employees of the Censors Bureau suspected they conveyed some mystic meaning for when received by the correspondent here, they have often been cut out of the pages, or carefully obliterated with ink, or sometimes, the entire batch of mail is withheld for two or three months at a time.

The latter is the favorite method pursued by the censor's office for preventing information of a harmful nature from being disseminated. It is not unusual for news cables or business dispatches of a nature seemingly suspicious to be quietly forwarded a week or so after the sender has forgotten having filed them.

On the whole, however, from an American point of view, there has been little complaint regarding either cables or mails, considering the activity of spies in Italy. Most of the complaints are made editorially by Italian newspapers which, when news is dull, print long tirades declaring that the censor is suppressing interesting news.

"Oh My, But I Was Miserable" She Cries

"I can't think of enough good things to say in praise of Tanlac," says Mrs. Leah Stouff, of 315 Cherry Street, Reading, Pa. "For it has certainly proved a blessing to me."

"Oh my, but I was miserable! I was all run down and in constant agony with rheumatism that I could stand. My ankles and knees lacked what the doctors call synovial fluid and they would get stiff and swollen and so painful I could hardly move."

"A friend of mine, Sallie Riegel, urged me to try Tanlac and I am so very glad I took her advice for I began to get better right away. I could feel my strength coming back and the pain all stopped soon after I began rubbing the sore joints with Kinoman's Tanlac."

"Now I feel so good I can hardly realize that I am the same person that used to have to go upstairs on her hands and knees to get to bed."

"The wonderful Tanlac medicines have done it all and I am glad to recommend them to all who are afflicted with rheumatism for I know relief will follow their use."

Tanlac, the famous reconstructive tonic, is now being introduced here at the Gorjas Drug Store, where the Tanlac man is needing the people and explaining the merits of this master medicine.—Adv.
