We Are Not Speculators We Are Merchants

That's the Reason For

THE GLOBE'S

One Thousand Suit Campaign

Every suit in our stock is worth more now than what we paid for it. Next year they will be still higher.

If we were speculators we would hold the merchandise and sell it next year at a greatly advanced price.

But we are merchants and there is more profit in holding customers than in holding merchandise.

The following values show why the Globe Clock is steadily moving toward the thousand mark.

Peace Which Comes After Turmoil Is Very Lovely

BY BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Experience is universal. When John clasps Jane in his arms and tells her that he loves her as woman was never loved before, he is wrong. Every man says that to the woman was never loved before, he is wrons. Every man says that to the woman he loves, and every woman thrills in response to it as all their ancestors have been doing since Adam and Eve began it in the Garden of Eden.

"Hy cynical!" says Miss Young-love, and stops reading at this point. But her older and sadder (as well as wiser) sisters and brothers get at once a crumb of comfort. They can look ahead. They recognize the inevitable next step.

Love is universal—so is sorrow, and so is the peace which comes after suffering and turmoil.

There are a great many hysterical folks who enjoy exclaiming over a cut finger, and demanding attention and sympathy and the services of a trained nurse and surgeon therefor. They get a dramatic, glow from their own suffering. They like imagining their pain unique, individual.

Leona can be guaranteed to "go up in the air" at least once a week over the agonies for which life singles her out. Those who are her intimates can never be safe from a phone call after midnight or before six a. m. if Leona feels that suffering has claimed her again. In her own mind she exaggerates the failure to appear on the first day of the month of the rent check, which is the greater part of her income, as the absolute approach of poverty and destitution.

er part of her income, as the absolute approach of poverty and destitution.

If she is out with a group of friends and she decides that she has a sick headache and must go home, and no one volunteers to leave the matinee to go with her, Leona feels abused. Martyrdom to her friendships and utter lack of loyalty are the things she feels sure are her lot if none of her friends phone her or send roses or other beautiful tributes to her suffering.

The Old Story

I happened to telephone her one afternoon about a dinner engagement she had for that evening. The hosfess had been compelled to change the hour from eight to seven because one of her most important guests was leaving town on an early train. She could not reach Leona by way of telephone, so she asked me to convey the message. Out of that Leona managed to wrest for herself an insult and a total lack of consideration.

"Mrs. Van Zant might have told me, but I suppose I'm not important enough to get a phone call. Of course the only person who counts with her is a celebrity. Professor Johnson wants to take an early train, so she puts the dinner an hour ahead. Of course, I get home from my work at six and need a little rest before I go out to dinner—that doesn't matter. I don't count. Well, I'm used to the non one ever considers me." It is as much of Leona's oration as I can remember.

can remember.

Most situations need not be taken personally. There were going to be eleven guests at the dinner and ten of them were being hurried even as was Leona; but she insisted on considering the situation as peculiar to herself.

was beening the situation as peculiar to herself.

Which of us does not know at least one man or woman like Leona? Which of us does not himself occasionally act like Leona?

There are only seven plots in all the world, say some of our sages, and around those seven all romance, all drama, all short stories must be built. Even situations are not unlimited. And so anything which happens to John Jones and Jane Smith, of Texarkana, Texas, is very likely to be paralleled in the experience of another John and Jane up in Bangor, Maine, or out in Walla Walla, Washington.

You Are Not Alone

Considering yourself as the one individual in the world to whom the humidity and heat of a July day are excessively annoying is a completely about thing to do. It lays too much dividual in the world to whom the humidity and heat of a July day are excessively annoying is a completely absurd thing to do. It lays too much stress on you and it distracts your attention from the breadth of vision gained by looking at the outside world to the narrow focal point of your cwn woes.

Suppose you do lose your position, suppose the woman you love is faithless to you, suppose you investments come out very badly, suppose you are lonely—none of that is peculiar to you as an individual. Of course, you can't endure anybody else's tragedy; of course, the fact that your tragedy is paralleled by many others does not make it any less tragic to you.

But suppose everybody in the world sat around making a fuss from morning to night about the things which annoyed them, which were a source of unhappiness and disappointment to them—what an infernal din and clamor of complaining there would be all about us!

The people who sit down and demand sympathy for their troubles are seldom actually as badly off as the brave souls who try to find a way out!

Do you remember that bit of slang which was popular a few years ago. I have troubles of my own; tell yours to the policeman'? I always felt that probably the policeman had troubles of his own, too, and might not relish the part of his job which!
