And those who are in a position to Judge state that this estimate is conservative. There is no doubt that golf now has more actual participants then any other outdoor sport in this country.

A critic who recently made an exhaustive effort to determine just how many new players enlist to pursue the clusive ball over the links of this country every year declared that as nearly as can be figured. There are approximately 11,000 golf courses in this country. This number does not include the links golf courses in this country. This number does not include the links golf courses in this country. This number of courses would be greatly increased.

Some idea of the growth of golf can be gleaned from what has transpired in this district. No doubt the growth here has been greater than in some less thickly populated sections of the country, but it is safe to state that the growth of the game has been in proportion everywhere. Five years ago it was estimated that not more than 500 persons played on the public courses at Van Cortlandt and Pelham Bay parks.
