LETTERS FROM THE FIRING LINE IN FRANCE

HARRISBURG BOY IS IN THICK OF REAL FIGHTING

B. Franklin Etter Tells of Hauling the Wounded Under Fire

ut the French are brave, won-y brave, and never think of g. They come out of the covered from head to foot with nd blood, and never whimper they are wounded.

Through Gas Attacks
I've gene through two gas attacks so far, one from gas shells and the other one a regular gas attack. In the latter the gas rolls along in a thick white cloud, which has a sweetish but sickening smell. It makes your eyes sting and if you don't put on your mask you would be asphyxiated. It is terrible stuff. Of course we wear our steel helmets all the time and are never without our gas masks.

and besides you've got to drink it.
The doctors make you. They won't always let you drink the water.

NURSE FROM HERE WRITES OF WAR WORK

THURSDAY EVENING,

Mrs. Helen Gage Tells of the Wounded Men in French

where they live. I wonder if our boys will be as brave?
"It's getting late—I go to bed with the hope that to-morrow will bring your mail. You must always tell me every little thing when you write.
"With dearest love to everyone, "Devotedly, June 19, 1917. "Helen.

HELPING YOU

TO DECIDE ON

SERVICE ARM

A man is not in position to make plans even a day ahead. It is said that the question, "Wonder when I will be called almost becomes an obsession. He takes it to bed and wakes with it in the morning. He reads of the successes of the troops at the front and wishes he were with them, he reads of the reverses and wishes more than ever to be in the thick of the fighting.

The chief objection pointed out was the loss of training the men experience while they are waiting for assignment. It may stretch from months into a year. The men who enlisted when they did but in active service have become non-coms. Some of them have, that he prefers the medical corps because you do not have to carry a gun and get near the firing line he is told just what kind of unpleasant duties may arise in that branch. He is also told that he will not be one iota safer than in the best branch for the man who does not want to see much of the fighting. It is said that the possible who were fitted to accept the intention of the army service have become and the said to enlist in the infantry. The great cry of the army to-day is said to be for infantrymen.
