MOXIE WINS AGAIN

MOXIE

PROXIE

The great brewing and malting firm of Chicago, Ill., The Wacker & Birk Brg. & Malting Co., through their attorneys, Messrs. Mason, Fenwick & Lawrence, of Washington, D. C., in July, 1916, attempted to register in the United States Patent Office the word "PROXIE" for non-alcoholic beverages. The Moxie Company forthwith filed vigorous objections through its general trade-mark and trade-name counsel, Oliver Mitchell, Esq., of Boston, Mass., and vigorously prosecuted this op-

Testimony was taken at Boston, Mass., and at Chicago, Ill. The testimony showed that "PROXIE" is a so-called product of barley-malt, grits and hops, brewed, fermented and then dealcoholized and resembling beer in color and taste.

The Moxie Company's objecton in brief was that the mark "PROXIE" is so similar in sound and appearance to "MOXIE" that confusion would arise, and the public would be liable to imposition, and likelihood of damage in consequence to the Moxie Company.

The "PROXIE" proprietors opposed the Moxie Company's position vigorously, taking the position that "PROXIE" was not of the same distinctive properties as "MOXIE," denying that there was such similarity between "PROXIE" and "MOXIE" as to lead to confusion.

The final hearing and argument was held in the United States Patent Office at Washington, D. C., before the Honorable Examiner of Interferences, on April 3, 1917. The decision in the matter of "MOXIE" versus "PROXIE" has just been handed down, fully sustaining the Moxie Company's position. Quoting from the decision: "It is clear that the marks - that is 'PROXIE' and 'MOXIE' -- are so nearly alike as to cause confusion and mistake in the minds of the public. In the case of 'MOXIE' versus 'MODOX,' 153 Fed. Rep. 476, the Circuit Court of Appeals held 'MOXIE' was infringed by 'MODOX'. Certainly these words are not so nearly alike in sound and appearance as 'MOXIE' and 'PROXIE'. As has so often been said, it is difficult to understand why a new comer in an established line of business selects a mark quite like that of a well-advertised mark, if he really wishes to distinguish his goods from those of a competitor. There is no necessity for so doing. The field of distinctive marks is limitless, yet the applicant has apparently selected a mark as near like that of a known and extensively advertised mark in the same line of business as it was possible to do and avoid exact duplication."

To the Millions of Moxie Drinkers Everywhere:-We are pleased to inform you of our success in protecting our good name and you from the likelihood of imposition.

For the past Thirty Years we have been uniformly successful in protecting ourselves and Moxie Drinkers from the great horde of imitators and infringers, at, however, enormous expense, as it involved suits against parties from Maine to Cali-

We shall be grateful to you if you will bring to our attention anything which is in any way an invasion of our rights or an infringement on our trade-mark or tradename, "MOXIE," and you may rest assured that we will be as diligent in the future as we have been in the past in preventing anything which in our opinion may work a fraud on the Moxie Company or Moxie Drinkers.

Your generous patronage has made "MOXIE" the standard beverage, and we desire to take this opportunity to thank you for your valued patronage, and we trust to merit your good will in the future as we have in the past.

Very truly yours,

THE MOXIE COMPANY
