

WOMEN'S LAW TO BE MODIFIED

The State Livestock Sanitary Board Announces Several Changes

The State Industrial Board today announced a new regulation for employment of women in summer hotels and issued a rule prohibiting employment of miners in establishments where high explosives are manufactured.

The order in regard to employment of women, which was made under authority of the Showalter act of 1917, is as follows: "That the Industrial Board grants to the short term hotels, operating approximately four months in the year, the privilege of seven days a week on the basis of a seven-hour day; it being understood that the employees in such hotels working more than seven hours per day shall not be scheduled under the terms of this ruling, but will be classed under the terms of the women's law of 1915; it being further understood that the schedule of hours of labor shall be posted as called for by law.

The ruling on employment of minors in high explosive factories prohibits them from places where there are made picric acid, smokeless powder, and trinitrotoluol, a dangerous explosive used for shells.
