Finally they are taken to another set of drying rooms, the finished product being a white substance coated upon a plate of glass. Of course the plates made use of by photographers are of different sizes. Hence the glass sheet passes through another machine, in which guides are so fixed that the glass passes over a diamond point. This scratches each sheet, so that it can be broken into the exact size of the "dry-plates" which are sold in the photographic shops.  POTATOES LEFT IN FIELDS

SOUSA AND HIS BAND

to a Pitch of Perfection
Most people, at some time of their life, dabbie in photography, but while millions upon millions of photographic plates are used each year, very few people have the shifted same, every photographer must have wondered at some time how it was possible to produce these objects, considering their extreme sensitive, ness to light, says London Answers. Photographic plate making has been carried to the highest pitch of operfection, with the possible exclusion of certain special plates used in color photography.

The plates for direct color photography are now being manufactured with a considerable amount of success in England.

The plates are usually made in a country district, as it is most essential that there should be no dust about, or any of the deleterious fumes used in samoky, industrial towns the finest photographic plates. Belgium furnishes the best glass for the purpose. It is stacked in the factory in enon-mous piles, each containing thousands of sheets.

First of all the small sheet of glass destined to form the support for the sensitised film, is carefully cleaned, ed so as to be ready to receive the preliminary coating, upon which first scrubs one side of the plate and then the other. A stream of clean water flows over the surface of the glass all the time.

The work is all done automatically and after all the plates are well with an adhesive. The plates, or 'water, which squit ways every coating, or "substratum," a special liquid flowing over the surface of the plates.

In this manner the glass passes in at one side of the machine, coming out at the other side cleaned and conted with an adhesive. The plates are carried on in almost complete darkness, as otherwise the light would spoil the sensitive to the action of light.

The next operation of silver saits, extended and place in the daylight.
