The Has-Beens

A soldier of the legion once lay down in Algiers; Maud Muller came To nurse the same— A woman's presence cheers.

The boy forsook the burning deck and to Algiers he sped, And did his share With others there Around the soldier's bed.

The village blacksmith was on hand; young Lochinvar as Well; The Light Brigade The journey made, Urged on by Dr. Fell.

And soon the soldier better got—ere long was feeling fine Whereat the throng All went along To Bingen-on-the-Rhine.

And here they met a weeping maid, with features wan and white, With bowed-dawn head, Who, moaning, said, "It shall not ring to-night."

They stood on the Bridge at midnight, above the Rhine's dim shore, Where the Cottage Maid, From a sylvan glade, Kept raving, "Nevermore."

At midnight, in his guarded tent, young Hiawatha wept; The stage at eve Stopped by to grieve— But on the moments crept.

"Who'll hold the bridge with me?" he cried. The loud appeal fell flat. But then a cheer rang loud and clear— 'Twas Casey at the bat!

"Winning or losing ball clubs are purely a matter of managers," recounts a contemporary.

Perhaps. Yet just where does this theory emerge with Connie Mack facing Fielder Jones in the most desperate tail-end struggle ever known for a cellar championship. Mr. Jones and Mr. Mack haven't quite changed that much, have they, since they were emblazoned some few siestas back as the "greatest in the game"?

No, the above theory doesn't quite hold. Not by 50 or 85 per cent. Is it to be understood, for an illustration, that Mr. Rowland is far and away beyond Mack, Jones, Jennings and the others?

Jess won the championship in 1915. He has found but one man to face since—the same being Frank Moran.
But after Jim Jeffries had cleaned up Corbett and Fitz for a double turn he ruled the field, with no adversary around, for an even longer period. After the Munroe smear the Californian was finally forced to retire, as all business had reached an end.
He fought Munroe in 1904. It was six years later before he was dragged back to make the last stand—and received the first K. O. in his career. But Jeffries for three or four years was as far above the rest of the heavyweight field as Wilard is to-day.

A Why

"I'll tell you why the White Sox will win," writes a Western fan.
"The West held the world series title in 1906, 1907, 1908 and 1909. We haven't held it since. Now, after an eight-year lapse, we are due again—and being due, will arrive. Could anything be simplier?"

Half-Strides

Half-Strides

One of the main differences between strategy and boneheadism is about this: The one that gets by is strategy.

In knocking a rival it is just as well to remember that only the head above the crowd comes in for the rap.

The three most eminent second basemen on record stand as Eddie Collins, Johnny Evers and Nap Lajole. The first two have collected or are about to collect from five world's series, while the third has never collected from one. Such being the breaks of the festive frolic.

Bender, Thorpe and Meyers—isn't it about time for some scout to seize another collection to keep the Indian in the spotlight? With Carlisle's football glory fading and the three chiefs not so far from skidding territory, the hour seems to be ripe to raid another wigwam.

His most widely read story is "The Barrier," showing in film form at the Colonial Theater the first three days of this week. Everything about "The Barrier" is powerful—characters, plot and incident. It is "bigness" spelled with capital letters. The principal characters in the story are, as Mr. Beach announced when the book was first published, taken from life—men knew in his five years' experience in Alaskan mining camps. "The Barrier" is a picture for all types, all ages, all classes of people. It will give the confirmed movie fan a new idta of the possibilities of motion pictures—it will move and thrill and fascinate those for whom the ordinary picture has no appeal.
