

IMPROVED DYES DUE TO CHEMISTS

Great Progress Made in U. S.
Since War Stopped
Importations

The rapid progress of the chemical industry in the United States indicates that this country will be chemically independent after the war, according to members of the American Chemical Society, which has just concluded its fifty-fifth annual convention at Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Since the beginning of the war, it is estimated, nearly $200,000,000 has been invested in plants to produce dyestuffs "made in America." Enormous factories have been erected. Statistics of the United States Bureau of Census, for Jan. 1, 1915, show that there were then 112 establishments in the country, with a total capitalization of only $21,384,000. Later statistics are not available.

The United States will be so well equipped, those familiar with the situation say, that it will be able to retain a greater portion of its trade in dyes and dyestuffs, colors, tints and shades after the war. The United States dyes, while in some cases as pure and regular in quality as the German dyes, are not yet all perfected, but from the results already obtained the future of the industry in this country bids fair to be successful, members of the society say.

About 72 per cent. of the world's supply of artificial dyes was manufactured in Germany, before the war. The United States was importing about 25,000 tons annually, and manufacturing only about 3000 tons. This shows the opportunity which American chemical industries have had placed before them.

Methods discovered and formulated recently assure experts and manufacturers in the United States that many products which have come from natural sources in Germany can now be made by electrolytical utilization of many products, heretofore considered waste, will keep prices low enough to permit competition for goods made in this country.

There was a decided change in the character of colored silks and of all textiles, in fact, when the importation of German dyes ceased at the beginning of the war. In many persons noticed the rawness of the colors of men's neckwear, which acquired a garish character, and which in many respects were so glaring that they offended the eye of the observer possessed of refinement.

The cessation of large imports of dyes from Germany affected many businesses, and there were ink makers who found it difficult to keep up the supply of some of their products. Printing inks like scarlet, blue, certain greens, purples, etc., were so scarce that printers' prices went skyward.

The manufacture of many colors, shades, etc., was suddenly thrust upon American chemists. Germany had been making some 40,000 colors, shades, etc., a wide range which could not be met at once by American manufacturers, but was partially taken care of by a reduction of the number of colors and an increase in the output of a few of them. To-day the American chemists have devised formulas for producing some 400 colors, tints and shades.

CHILEAN SUBMARINE GOES THROUGH CANAL

CHILEAN SUBMARINE. Photograph shows a submarine of the Chilean Navy sailing through the Panama Canal en route to New London, where it will practice diving. The Chilean Government was having certain of her battleships built in England. These battleships the British government took over in return giving to the Chilean Government six submarines being built at the Fore River shipyards for Great Britain, which were under detention at the Charleston Navy Yard. These subs were officially turned over to Chile last Spring, and since that time the new owners have had crews on board learning how to use the vessels. The crews were quartered in the historic U. S. frigate Constitution. The vessels will start for Chile, after going through try-out tests at New London.

MENNONITES ARE FORCED TO WEAR KHAKI AT CAMP

'Plain People' Will Be Forced to Work but Not to Fight

Camp Meade, Admiral, Md., Sept. 21.—Discipline's iron hand crushed the first revolt at Camp Meade by the conscientious objector when Mennonites from Pennsylvania counties were forced into the khaki. This drastic action was taken by the military authorities after the Mennonites had rebelled against the uniform and appealed to their commanding officers that they be allowed to retain civilian dress. But while the ban of the Federal Government in the matter of uniform was forced early, it was made plain that none of the actual martial duties will be required of these men. There must be several scores already in camp and in all about one hundred are expected. They will be given work in the trenches and about the cantonment, but no rifle will be put in their hands nor will they be compelled to violate their scruples about actual warfare. The original rebels were two Lansdale chaps who arrived with yesterday's detachment. The lieutenant in charge of the men ordered them to go to supply headquarters and be outfitted in the regulation manner.

At this command the Mennonites stepped from the line and awaited the next move of the officer. He asked them to explain the meaning of their action, and the objectors said that their faith forbade them donning the khaki. Instead they said that they would be amenable to all discipline, but asked if they could not retain their civilian dress. This first crisis at the camp frankly puzzled the young junior officer. He cogitated for a time and then decided to put the entire matter before the colonel commanding the regimental barracks, where these religionists are housed. The colonel made short work of the revolt.

Put them in uniform. "Put them in uniform," he ordered, "but tell them that they won't have to carry a rifle or do any military duty that conflicts with their faith." The lieutenant trudged back with this message, only to find that his recalcitrants were a bit stubborn and resolved to disobey. Again they declared that under the circumstances they must refuse to don the khaki. The lieutenant ordered four of his men to escort the rebels to the supply headquarters and bring them back to the barracks according to the military standards. Thus, under virtual arrest, these men were outfitted and then taken to the hospital for their physical examination. With this precedent established, the other Mennonites stood up and came down with the first day's arrivals were also forced into uniform while the same process will be carried out to-morrow and the next day with those who fight against wearing the soldier's attire.

More than 2,800 additional Pennsylvanians came to join their brethren who trooped to Meade yesterday. They came in the same spirit, with laughter on their lips and a song in their hearts. But this joy turned to blue gloom when they were forced to broil in the sun and go hungry for a long time—an unnecessary long time—through what is termed the manifold blunders of the local boards who sent them down here.

Lieutenant Colonel Tenney Ross, chief of staff, said that many hardships had come to the men because of the methods which had been pursued. Many of the boards sent their men down without the necessary papers and without proper credentials. These unfortunate were forced to stand under the broiling sun for an hour or more while the necessary papers and got them properly verified and qualified. Troop trains, which came creeping into the camp yesterday, were late to-day, but this sat lightly on the men in the war. The first contingent to arrive was from Adams and York counties, and they sang and hallooed, creating a veritable din as their train snaked to a stop.

Up the hill they tolled swarming boxes, bags and every man's complement to carry their luggage, while they pointed straight for the mess tent, as a pointer takes the scent. In the windows of the barracks uniformed men, who thought themselves veterans because they had arrived the incoming pilgrims. These visitors mistook the older fellows for seasoned warriors and they accepted the air of defiance from the windows with true meekness.

The typhoid prophylaxis and the vaccination were given. The fellow came down in his "birthday clothes," as a pointer takes the scent. A surgeon stabbed him behind the left shoulder with the prophylaxis needle, and he passed around to another physician, who "injected" him for the small-pox preventive.
