Yesterday the interiors of the stores were as full of beautiful things as the windows. To-day an even greater assortment of fall wear is to be seen. The formal opening will close to-morrow night, but the merchants will continue to bring in new designs that were bought especially to please the particular women and men of Harrisburg.

Especially noticeable in the new garments for women is the dainty, fairy-like design of the evening gowns. The war has not forced the American woman, as yet, to forego her love of the delicate and dainty, and the evening gowns shown by the Harrisburg merchants denote that care and thought have been expended in their creation. in their creation.
This fall the people of Harrisburg will not have to leave the city to select their costumes for the winter.
