Girl Finds Her Fiance Blind in War Hospital

London, Sept. 24.—One of the bits of romance on the battle front, whose name is legion, came to light the other day. A society girl quarreled with her soldier flance, and he rushed to the front, determined to throw away his included in the second of the life. She, heartbroken, became a nurse and soon after was sent to France. There she was assigned to care for an officer who had been blinded by a fragment of shell. It was her fiance. She did not reveal her identity, but did everything she could to mitigrate his suffering. One day he asked her to write a love letter for him at his dictation. It proved to be to his fiance in England—herself. She began taking the dictation, but broke down and revealed herself.

A complete reconcilation followed, although it was believed that he was hopelessly blind. A few days later, however a surgeon made a re-examination and found the soldier's sight could be restored. The wedding will follow when the bandages are removed from his eyes.
