What Used to Be Called "Swine Food" in Germany Now Is Accepted Gladly. A Harbor Full for Crippled Ships

NO. 8-HORSEMEAT AND ELEPHANT MEAT.

It was in Leipzig that I ate elephant meat. I had gotten used to queer dishes by that time, although this was early this year, about in January, before Germany seemed to be so badly pinched. But I had eaten horse meat a number of times, also the strong tasting "horse" carrots which, before the war was only "horse" carrots which, before the war was only good for pigs. In fact, I ate many things in Germany which, before the war were called difference ontinued Captain Harrell. "The continued Captain Harrell."

diers have been eating roots for two years. Of course, salads cannot be made with oil as there is none. But there is plenty of vinegar in Germany. Two other things which I saw in plenty were lettuce and spinach. They were n Germany. I wo other things which I saw in plenty were lettuce and spinach. They were high-priced, but we could buy an almost unlimited quantity. The lettuce we would cook in its own moisture, put it na skillet, put on a lid, and let it cook slowly down analytic was just like spinach. It took six or eight heads of lettuce to make enough greens for one per-son. It was tasteless, though for the salt in Germany has no flavor. It is im-seasoning. So one can imagine what it would be like to make a meal of spinach or lettuce cooked in this way, without seasoning, with only a with one piece of rour, black bread to make it "tasty." ELEPHANT MEAT IS TASTY. But my elephant meat experience was unique. There is a very fine zoo in Liepsig, and I and a gif friend, a newspaper correspondent, saw the sign in a 'restaurant as we were' walking along the street, "Elephant meat here." We went in and got it, paying 75 cents for a very small por-tion and two tiny optatoes. The meat was good, tasting a litter the beetsteak, although with a litte ourselves, he permitted us to go through and to go out on a little boat, one of those which took the work-men back and forth from the shore back and forth from the shore Never in my life have I seen a more beautiful sight than those boats, all illuminated. They were spread out until, just as I said, they looked like a city. The man pointed out the bi-
