U. S. Artillery Roars Blasting Salute to the Kaiser by Dropping Explosive Shells Into the Enemy's Lines; Take Places in Middle of Night During a Driving Rain Storm

With the American Army in France, Oct. 27 (By the Associated Press) — American troops are in the first line trenches on the French front.

The artillery fired the first shot of the war at 6 o'clock on the morning of a recent day at a German working party. There has been intermittent artillery fighting since.

The helmeted infantry marched in, without the knowledge of the enemy, on the same night, through rain and mud. The French soldiers in the trenches welcomed them enthusiastically.

The nearest enemy trench is several hundred yards away. The sector is one of the quietest on the front. It has not been taken over, being under the control of troops under the direction of the French.

The Americans have shelled German gun positions and troops, the enemy sending back shell for shell. The first shell case will be sent to President Wilson.

Cheer First Shot at Boches

The case is now in the possession of General Sibert. The shot was fired by a red-haired gunner as his comrades in the ranks and the assembled officers cheered. Later a luncheon in the field was attended by the American and French artists in celebration of the first American contact with the enemy.

The gun used in firing the first shot was one of the famous French 75's. On the second day the French shelled a German battery position which was located by sound and the enemy replied vigorously, projectiles falling close to the Americans who joined in the artillery duel.

In Drenching Rain

Standing in a little, almost deserted shell-wrecked village, well within hostile gun range and a few kilometers from the trenches The Associated Press correspondent watched the troops marching up in a driving rain over roads covered with sticky mud. The artillery had been firing all day and as a result the impression was given that there was considerable more activity on this front than there had been for some time.

It was soon after lulls in the firing and in the dark that the first machine guns hauled by Missouri mules, the American infantry, packs on their backs, rifles slung over their shoulders, rain glistening on their helmets and coats, the wind whipping the bottom of their coats around their legs which were moving with machine like precision.

The Americans swung down the street apparently as proud as though on dress parade notwithstanding they had marched miles from the billets where they had been since coming by motor trucks and railway from the instruction centers. As the ranks passed every now and then a soldier could be heard whistling softly to himself, his nearby comrades listening silently to sentimental and popular pieces.

"Stop That Noise" Finally from the rear came the whistled strain of a tune which all

The Austro-German advance is still held in check in the passes west of the Isontzo river leading to the Venetian plain. But the gravity of the conditions caused by the enormous forces of the enemy has led the supreme command of the Italian army to adopt precautionary measures.

General Cadorna, the Italian commander-in-chief, announced that in consequence of the retirement of the Italians to the former frontier line further arrangements are now being made for falling back from the Bainsizza high plateau.

This plateau is thrust forward between the Austrian flanks and while representing a splendid achievement of Italian arms, it becomes a menace with Field Marshal Von Mackensen's forces west of the Isontzo seeking to make a turning movement southward. The falling back from the Bainsizza plateau therefore is designed as a strategic move to checkmate the enemy's turning movement.
