

Two Girls Are Arrested While on Hobo Tour

Peoria, Ill.—Maude Bride, 18 years old, of Madison, Wis., said she was not going to hobo any more, as she sat on the upholstered seat of a passenger train just leaving for her home recently, in custody of her father.

She and Marie Shadel, 17 years old, also of Madison, were picked up by the police in Princeville one evening in a stranded condition and lodged in the detention home here. The two girls set out with $10 earned by Maude in a candy factory to hobo it to Waco, Tex., to visit their soldier sweethearts, whose names they gave as Herbert Ward, corporal of Company C, of Madison, and Ben Nickselski, a member of the Wisconsin band.

Bold Thief Faints at Sight of Two Police

Chicago.—Sergeant Vonboken and Patrolman Kittel arrived on the scene at the warehouse of Thomas L. Barrett, builders' supplies, at 120 North Fifth street, at 7:30 o'clock this morning in the nick of time, averting a bold daylight robbery and capturing a negro believed by them to be a thief who has been operating in the wholesale district for some time.

When the officers, in answer to a call from the night watchman, reached the warehouse they found the front door wide open, having been forced, and Kelly McNeely, a negro, 22 years old, loading bars of steel into a wheelbarrow. The negro, on seeing the officers, threw up his hands and fell to the floor in a faint. McNeely came to in a short time and told the officers he had intended wheeling his cargo of steel out the front door to his home.

PRODUCE TRACT LEASED Los Angeles, Cal.—The California Packing Company has leased 800 acres of land from I. M. von Schrititz, two and half miles southwest of Santa Ana, and half miles from the years. The land will be planted to refugee beans, chilis and pimientos, says a dispatch.

DYING SOLDIERS CALL FOR TOBACCO TO EASE PAIN

True Picture of First Line Hospital Given by Author of Great War Book "Over the Top"

Arthur Guy Empey, the young American soldier with the allies whose wonderful book, "Over the Top," has recently been published by the McClure Company, has no more graphic, vivid chapter than the one telling of a wounded English soldier's overwhelming desire for a smoke. Empey's "Over the Top" is an extraordinary work all through, more copies of it having been sold by the McClure firm than any other war book published as yet. Empey was in the thick of the strife and he writes like one who was genuinely a part of the horrors he depicts. Witness this excerpt:

I had been slightly wounded in an attack on the German lines and had been sent to the base hospital at Rouen. The bed next to mine was empty. The sheets were turned down, the pillow was missing and a rubber sheet was stretched across the center of the bed, the ends of which were neatly tucked under the mattress. It was my first time in a hospital, but even to me, a recruit, it seemed that that bed was specially prepared, was waiting for some special case. I was right. It was.

In the bed on my left was a Jock, a Scotie from the Fifteenth Royal Scots, or "ladies from hell" as this particular Highland regiment was lovingly called by Fritz, our neighbor in No Man's Land. This Jock had lost his left foot from a shell burst. I asked him why the bed was made up in such a peculiar manner. He told me that the occupant, a Canadian, was up in the "pictures" (operating theater) having both hands amputated at the wrists and also that the Canadian was blind, caused by the explosion of a bomb while raiding the German trenches.

In about half an hour four white-clothed orderlies came down the ward, carrying a stretcher. In the wake of the stretcher came a Red Cross nurse. They halted before the unoccupied bed on my right. This Red Cross nurse sat beside her patient, every now and then shoosing a fly away from the bandaged head of the patient. The other three orderlies of the bandaged form, one of whom was blind, the other two then a sigh, and the man began to sing, not "God Save the King" or "The Maple Leaf Forever," but "Never Introduce a Bloke to Your Lady Friend." Pretty soon this changed to shouts of "Ammo (ammunition)! Ammo! Ammo forward!" You could hear him all over the ward. The nurse started to sing a crooning lullaby. The shouting ceased. Further twitching and twisting, and the ether was expelled into an ever ready little receptacle held in the hands of the nurse. In a few minutes rays of consciousness penetrated to the brain of the wounded man and he began to mutter:

"Turn on the lights; it's dark, it's dark. I can't see. It's dark, dark. Take that damned pillow off my head. It's dark, dark. I tell you. What's the matter with my mitts? They're tied; cobblestone on them. Where am I, Smokey? This dugout's dark. Switch on the lights." The nurse was talking to him in a low voice and crooning her lullaby. My God, how that girl could sing! It was not long before the blinded soldier fell asleep. He slept for three hours, the nurse beside him. Not for a second did she leave her post. I that had been specially prepared, was waiting for some special case. I was right. It was.

The nurse was talking to him in a low voice and crooning her lullaby. My God, how that girl could sing! It was not long before the blinded soldier fell asleep. He slept for three hours, the nurse beside him. Not for a second did she leave her post. I that had been specially prepared, was waiting for some special case. I was right. It was.

Three doctors came through and held a low-voiced consultation. Two of them left; one stayed. The Jock whispered to me: "Poor bloke! He's going west. I know the signs." The dying man began to mutter. The nurse bent over him. She has a writing pad and a pencil in her hand. She whispered to me: "Dearie, the mail is going out. Do you want me to write a note home to the folks? Just a short note telling them that you are all right and will be with them in a couple of months?"

The patient answered: "Home? Folks? I've never had any since I was a kid. Home! God, I wish I had one!" The writing pad in the nurse's hand was wet. The bandage on my shoulder was wet, and the blood was soaking through. But blood is red. The voice of the wounded man again: "I want—want—want the cigarette. The nurse: 'What do you want, boy? What can I get for you—a nice cool drink?' 'A drink? Hell, no! I want a smoke! Where's my makings?' 'I want a fag—a smoke—a smoke!'"

She looked at the doctor. He nodded. She left the patient and came over to me. I felt as I were in the presence of God. She whispered to me: "Have you a cigarette, my dear, for that poor boy? He are all out—have not received any for two days. If the people at home only realized what a godsend tobacco is for these poor wounded lads they would send them out. They are as important to shells."

I told her to look in my kit bag. She looked through it and found one, all out of shape—a Goldrake. I think it was the only smoke left in that ward of sixty-nine patients. With joy in her eyes she went back to her patient and put the cigarette between his lips and lighted it. A contented sigh, two or three weak puffs and the lighted cigarette fell out of his mouth onto the sheet. He was asleep. It was getting late. I fell asleep. When I woke up it was morning. The bed next to mine was empty. The nurses in the ward had red eyes. They had been crying.

I turned an inquiring gaze to the Jock on my left. He solemnly nodded, and his mouth twitched, though he was going to cry, but suddenly he looked at me, tears in his eyes, and said, "Aw, go to hell!" and turned over on his side.

CONSERVATION OF LIVE STOCK ASKED Chicago, Ill.—Arthur G. Leonard, president of the Chicago Union Stockyards, has made an appeal to farmers to forego, in the world crisis, their share of the policy in hurrying to market live stock which, for the sake of the future and with a greater promise of profit, should be held on the farm. Leonard's message is sent out by the Illinois State Council of Defense, and is in part as follows: "To the average American farmer the world war is still a far-off event. He has been too busy to clearly realize its tremendous bearing upon American agriculture. Thus far he has thought of the war mainly as it affects the labor necessary to produce and gather the crops; he has planted and their market value.
