Department to circumvent the German U-boat, according to a statement authorized by Secretary Daniels. Since the declaration of war, the statement says, 40,000 different plans have been laid before the Navy Department, plans or models or ingenious devices representative of the thought and inventive talent of the country. The statement au-thorized by Secretary Daniels fol-lows:

of the country. The statement authorized by Secretary Daniels follows:

"A wide range of citizens have thus contributed, from the country's distinguished natural scientists and inventors who are almost constantly at work for the Government, to the obscure plowboy whose imagination has quickened to the idea of meeting the emergency and has fashioned a mechanism from wire and spools and a whittled stick as a token of his devotion.

"All of the suggestions submitted have received careful consideration, and those of merit have been prought to the attention of the Secretary of the Navy. Those ideas involving new principles, indicating careful thought and study and submitted in concrete form, have been presented to the Secretary of the Navy with full argument. Many proposals have been found to be impracticable, largely due to the failure of the inventors properly to inform themselves of certain fundamental principles. However, much valuable aid has been given to various branches of the war service. The naval consulting board and the Navy Department have prepared and are siving free distribution to pamphlets which give general information to inventors that they may avoid acting upon misconceptions as to fundamental principles, with consequent waste of effort.

"The predominating thought of inventors has turned on methods to combat the menace of the enemy submarine, and more than two-thirds of all the suggestions received by the naval consulting board have concerned this problem. The thought on submarine, and more than two-thirds of all the suggestions received by the naval consulting board have concerned this problem. The thought on submarine, sinvolving detection and destruction after detection.

"Second, means of avoiding submarine attack, involving instructions rection. "Second, means of avoiding submarine attack, involving instructions for merchant vessels, proper handling of vessels, camouflage, smoke screens and boxes and other confidential information known to our naval authorities. "Third, protection of ships against torpedo hits."

Course of Stream Turned to Complete Aerodrome

London, Nov. 16.—The opening this week of a large new aerodrome at Hanworth Park, near London, marks the completion of an engineering work which involved the deflection underground for a distance of nearly a mile, of the Wolsey River. The stream intersected the field selected for the main landing ground of the aerodrome and impeded the landing of aircraft there. To remove this defect, the engineers constructed a conduit, capable of carrying 27, 500,000 gallons of water dally, into which the stream has now been diverted, and its bed leveled to give an unbroken flat surface for the aerodrome. The size of the conduit was such that before the river was diverted fifty soldiers marched upright through the underground way.

The Emperor asserted that these efforts undoubtedly had had considerable effect upon certain nationalities and parties in Austria Hungary. But, he added, the Hapsburg and Hohenzollern houses were more closely united than ever and the Venetian offensive offered a good lesson as to what their peace policy should be.
