Harrisburg's unique situation in egard to its supply of river coal, which instead of becoming exhausted seems to be increasing in extent every year, is commencing to attract statewide attention, especially among the people of the North branch of Susquehanna whose mining methods have been the means of furnishing the state's capital with fuel for the effort. Only a few weeks ago a couple of men from Lacka-wanna and Luzerne counties took occasion while here to make extensive inquiries regarding the amount of coal dredged from the Susquehanna and expressed the opinion that if the communities up the stream took the proper precautions there would not be so much. They agreed, however, with some folks from Northumberland county, who made some observations here last summer, that Harrisburg was sure of river coal for years to come because the bed of the stream is lined with coal for many miles north of Harrisburg and that each succeeding freshet would having to the decrease the results. methods have been the means of many miles north of Harrisburg and that each succeeding freshet would bring to the doors of the capital renewal of its store. Rivermen say that the sanitary dam does not amount to very much as a coal catcher. Sand bars are said to be the great means of forming deposits, The rocky ledges which extend across the stream at Dauphin and the "fall," at Reckville do not seem across the stream at Dauphin and the "falls" at Rockville do not seem to hold as much fine coal as the shallow places near McCormick's island or the grass patches between Independence Island and the Harrisburg Academy. And, oddly enough, the rivermen say that down around Steelton and Highspire there is the best coal dredging to be found in the whole Harrisburg district every now and then. The coal seems to go with currents, which, as everyone familiar with the vagaries of the Susquehanna knows, swing and switch around every year and move sand bars and great trees with ease.

sand bars and great trees with ease. Daniel P. Gerberich, former president pro tem, of the State Senate and long senator from Lebanon county, who was buried today, had a host of friends among men prominent in affairs of Pennsylvania for the last quarter century and was one of the most traveled men in the Legislature in a long time. He had been in practically every state and after the Spanish War made a point of visiting the insular possessions. He was a warm friend of Secretary of Internal warm friend of Secretary of Internal Affairs Henry Houck, who was also a wide traveler, and the two used to like to exchange impressions of places they had visited. Dr. Gerberich practiced medicine all his life in Lebanen county and was known to thousands of its people, while he enjoyed as large an acquaintance in eastern Dauphin county as any one.
It is not generally known but Dr.
Gerberich was sponsor for most of

Rhine to smash in pieces the Gothic cathedrals.

Often, in the past few years, as they have watched the German shells dropping through the roof craplintering the carvings of the great Church of St. Remi, in Rheims, must the people of Champagne have thought of this warning, and have realized that there was nothing for it but to accept the advice of the poet, and to remain on guard with their rifles on their shoulders.

Harrisburg weather conditions.

Harrisburg weather conditions, which have been more than once results which have been more than once results with the sunusual this fall, have seldom produced a finer December day than yesterday. The sunshine was bright from early morning and the sunset was one of the kind that people visiting here have loved to go home and tell of. The colors in the western sky when the sun sank behind the first spurs of the Blue Ridge were brilliant as they were varied and the paling from red to pink and then to the lightest green speedily giving way to the darkness of evening attracted much attention.
