Having got the hang of the thing the drive, but it did surprise me the ther end of the stick when we came own. It really seemed that I was olding up the moniteur, who set so reacthfully in the front seat. After purtrips he declared me "tres-rien." which sure did surprise me to I was still more surprise we to I was still more surprise we to I made all the landings at I went without breakfast and in this bothered with the rats. The First Up Naturally, by the end of the day we were a pretty grouchy crowd, and his morning when the captain of he school made a little speech and old us if we did not get through n a specified time we would be hipped down to Pau, anyway, giv-ma 110-horsepower 18-meter Nieu-port and sent up to do acrobatics.

ably get a charce to fly a Nieu-port alone this afternoon. How They Eat So far we have not had "tripe" at the "ordinair." but their methods of feeding us would certainly not meet with your approval. Merely watching them cleaning off the ta-ble with a moist broom and letting the crumbs, which are pretty large at times, on the floor where they fall, would shock your housewifely instincts. I might tell you that we wash our table tools in the soup and dry them with bread, but you might be reading this at the table. Last somewhat startling experience when I was wakened by a rat promenad-ing across my face. Believe me, if he must have thought a German bomb was exploded under it, be-cause I sure roose up and reached for a shoe suddenly. Unfortunate-ly, though, I could find nothing to throw at it, but a little later I heard we moonlight excursionist snawing across the alster was awakened by a cross the alster was awakened by a noise on the shelf above his head. It seems two rats had discovered a jar of jam he was looking forward to eating for breakfast. One rat acted the hog and crawled inside the jar. The other, getting jealous, pushed rat and all off the shelf, much to the dismay and surprise of Van, who had just been awake long enough to know the meaning of the noise and was feeling around silently on the floor for a shee, when noise, jam and rats landed on noise, jam and rats landed or acce. That sort of spoiled the for the rats at least, not to on ruining Van's beauty and
