Life's Problems Are Discussed

Fashions of To-Day - By May Manton

a very strong impression of an unusual woman.

Clothes are something more than coverings. They are indications of character. I did not meet this woman. I did not have to. I knew all that I was interested in knowning about her from her clothes and the way she wore them.

She is fastidious. She is reserved. She is disciplined. She has herself thoroughly in hand. She concentrates on one thing at a time. She does not scatter nor splatter. She understands herself and her temperament. She has a strong personality, and she does not allow her garments to eclipse it.

I contrasted her with another woman who stood near her in a covering sown—why, I'll of the cattle have died and the stock with nuts, and as a result many of the cattle have died and the health of a large percentage has been affected seriously.
