machine may hit a bump and someone else. The same thing might happen if you didn't keep the plane going in a straight line.

Not So Bad That was not so bad, but it assumed dangerous proportions when nosing down to land after shutting off the motor, back came the gasolene, even with goggles.

Out of Breath Since I soon ran out of breath calling myself names for my forgetfulness, and the strap was beginning to chafe, I snapped it open...

Tries Again Finally, however, I got a machine again to fly alone, and take it from me, when I came down to land, I had not forgotten to "cut the motor" on both side and stick.

Something Wrong I kept the engine running though and having landed safely, went bumpy-bump along the ground back. Believe me, I made some holes that time, even if it was in English, and positively refused to fly until the trouble in that motor was discovered.

Up 3,000 Metres By the time I had reached 2,800 metres there were no more holes discernible than the clouds. The clouds had closed in below me like smoke over Pittsburgh, but I still continued climbing as my altimeter dial registered up to 3,000 metres and I was going to chase the hand clear around the dial if it took an ear. It nearly did too, because I could hardly hear the engine with the wind.

fine still required looking after and the belt could not be fastened with one hand even though I left go the stick.

The fact that a student had gone into a "virille" (tail spin) from 150 metres the day before and sustained a broken leg and arm was still fresh in my mind—and here I was at 3,000.

A Good Engine She sure was some engine and could pass anything on the track. This fact nearly proved unfortunate in several cases, because there were a lot of Voisins and J-Cats flying also.

the acrobatic school at last, the amusement. I have no doubt that I will be there!

Just finished a chicken dinner at the Y. M. C. A. hotel, which sure was some meal. Gee! My belt's getting tight! There is also to be a concert to-night with ragtime quite prevalent. Well, you know how much I like ragtime! And there may also be some American girls. Now you know I will be there!

Had a hot bath last night, which was sure appreciated. After living in mud and rain for two weeks with nothing but cold water to wash in, you can imagine how much it was enjoyed. Honest! I made the water so hot, nearly scalded my skin off. Will write more later.

What a pity she doesn't know Resinol would clear her skin

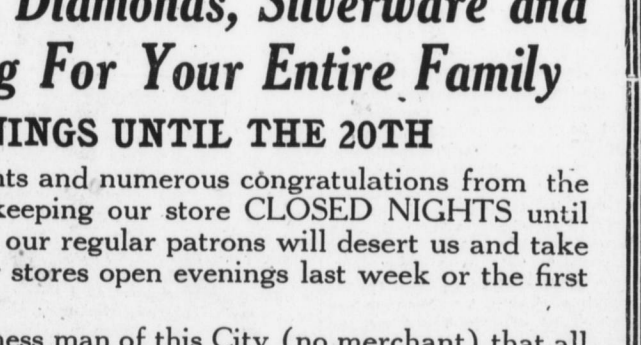

"She would be a pretty girl, if it wasn't for that pimply, blotchy complexion!" But the regular use of Resinol Soap, aided at first by a little Resinol Ointment, would probably make it clear, fresh and charming.

When I got to 1200 metres I was among the clouds and began having an interesting time dodging them because I wished to keep the school in view to prevent getting lost.

STORE NOT OPEN EVENINGS UNTIL THE 20TH

We are still receiving favorable comments and numerous congratulations from the public in reference to our humane spirit of keeping our store CLOSED NIGHTS until the 20th.

We were told by a representative business man of this City (no merchant) that all the motive he could see for stores keeping open nights last week and compelling their employees to work long hours in the cold, go to their homes in the snow with poor transportation service, etc., was selfishness and greed and the merchants that did so are purely and simply ignoring the Government's request on conservation, etc.

We have had no request from anyone to keep our store open nights until the 20th, and it is gratifying to us to have the co-operation of our employees, other stores' employees and the public unanimously.
