Perhaps because the provide the source of the source on the source of the source of the source of the running, jumping, jubi-lant youth of other American chil-dren, their eyes saw straight into the very heart of suffering. This is what they did: they poured forth their swhich had been given them from a bill or two, into a white box marked with the Red Cross. In the Convent In the Convent of the Sacred Heart in New York, where three hundred sheltered children, rich in kindness, receive their early education, the Reverend Mother speaks often of the children abroad. Without asking for direct sacrifices, she has mentioned that sometimes when one is about to buy a new ribbon, or a pair of silk stockings, on stopping to think one finds they are not needed so much, perhaps, as food and clothing may be needed for children of the var. And so many a radiant little gift of girlish sacrifice has been placed in her hands to send to them. One day—it was long before we to were in the war—these children, girls from four to fourtene years. They decided to ask the Reverend Mother how much it would amount to in money or barrels of flour if they gave up their "gouter" for the reat of the year—that little daily treat at half past four, of plain cake or toast and a sweet—the "party". that was the high point of the day. Learning its equivalent, they asked that this be denied them and the some yeant to those other children overseas. A womm who had done war relief

Their Answer

Their Answer The woman had lived in a social settlement in the center of the Jew-ish district of the city at one time, and as she looked at the rows of faces before her she remembered with sudden vividness the almost forgot-ten scenes of ten years before-of little Jewish boys in the back room of a synagogue, after public school hours, swaying back and forth in concert as they shouted out long pas-iages from the Talmud; of the girls in the sewing classes listening hun-igvily to stories, with their quick racial response to anything dramatic. Her own imagination quickened; she felt deeply moved, and humble to address them, thinking of their engerness for knowledge, their pas-sionate desire to be young Ameri-ens-these noor children from many gerness for knowledge, their par-onate desire to be young Ameri-ins-these poor children from many childish minds they carried the re-membrance of the sufferings of their people. The speaker stepped back and tripped and almost had a funny fail, but not one of them laughed. With heads bent forward, they were concentrated on the war, and what the Red Cross did. And later, to their teachers, from their scanty earnings and savings, they brought money that was to have been spent perhaps for candy and hair-ribbons and sour pickles and one pair of hockey skates; of-lerings that suggested to the woman who had seen hungry children on both sides of the ocean gold and rankincense and myrrh. In all the beauty and kindness of his Red Cross Christmas member-tip campaign there is the thought of the children. Perhaps, if in new simplicity we become as little chil-ren, our eyes will be clear and true o see how wonderful, how signif-ant is the observance of a Red Cross hristmas at the beginning of this ear of anguish and of service.
