Starving Baby Chokes to Death on Crust
Philadelphia, Jan. 2. — While thousands set about glittering banquet boards and shouted happy wishes for a prosperous New Year yesterday, two-year-old Thomas Apokla was starving to death in a dismal small room at 4 Fairbanks street, an alley in the rear of 245 South American Place. Two brothers, one a little older, had heard the wailing of the baby all day, but their own tiny bellies were so pinched with hunger that they could do no more than reassure him that "mother will soon be home."

"Mother," a widow, was at work hard drudging toil that would not even support one. When she returned home at night her first thought was for the little one. Dry bread, the only food in the house is hardly the thing for a two-year-old, and when the ravenous baby tore away a huge piece he choked and his body drew up in a spasm. Mother tried and proved useless and when Mrs. Apokla rushed to the Third and DeLancey street police station and rushed back with Dr. Randolph Fairies, the police surgeon, little Thomas Apokla was forever out of the clutch of poverty and want. He was dead.
