

MORE TOBACCO IS NEEDED FOR LARGER ARMY

Nearly Two Million Men Under Arms Are Hungry For Smokes

When the Kaiser started in to split the world in two, He bit off seven times as much as any one could chew, So here we are upon our way to join the folks in France, To pin the Double Cross upon the bosom of his pants.

When the war is over and we reckon the expense, We'll try and "hock der Kaiser" for as much as fifty cents; It's more than he is worth, but we will spend it in Berlin To fumigate the places where the royal bunch have been.

Carried away by the spirit of Secretary Baker's message this morning the poet, B. Bates, let loose this parody on poor old John Brown, hoping that it might cheer up some of the fighting laddies who are now about to jump on the Hun. You can't blame the bard for being enthusiastic even though his dithyramb skips second base occasionally. Everybody should feel just as nippy as our genial bard. "Never was an army so quickly raised," says Secretary Baker. "More than 1,500,000 Americans under arms," he assures us, "and a substantial army in France." And now get this: "The death rate in our forces is slightly less than would have been the death rate of men of the same age at home." Does that look as though the so-called "heroes" being glorified with smokes as some want us to believe? Not on your life. In spite of the abrupt change in their mode of life the soldier boys are healthier than at home, and they ought to know what they want. Send your contribution to the Telegraph to-day so that you lend a hand to give the fighting men some real cheer before the 1,500,000 all get "over there."

SUFFRAGE WINS IN HOUSE FIGHT

Hart, Democrat, of Indiana, who deserted a bed in the Providence hospital, this city, long enough to cast his prosafranchise vote, after which he was hurried back to the institution. Dramatic as were these important incidents in this city of thrills in Congress, they were vastly overshadowed when, after the vote had been taken and was being counted to show that one more antisuffrage vote would kill the resolution, Representative Dominick, of South Carolina, gained the recognition of Speaker Clark. He had not voted and announced that he wished to vote "no." Southern Democratic leaders, notably Ragsdale, of South Carolina, cheered by this indication that the campaign against the suffrage movement was still to prevail, rushed to the pit to support Dominick's effort to be recorded. Transfranchise leaped down to the pit.

The pit became a babel with the voices of the suffrage advocates declaring that Dominick's name had been called, that he was in the chamber at the time and that under the rules he was not entitled to be recorded. But the Speaker ruled in his favor, and to all appearances the equal suffrage effort was lost. Ragsdale led the applause. Then along came Representative Joseph J. Russell, a white-haired Missourian and a Democrat, and he, too, asked to be recorded. He was questioned as to why he had not voted when his name was called. He said he had voted, but that the clerk evidently did not hear him. Then the Speaker instructed the clerk to recall the gentleman's name. "Mr. Russell, of Missouri," belated the clerk. "Aye!" shouted the Missourian.

Women Cheer Wildly
The day was won. Speaker Clark announced the passage of the resolution by a vote of 274 to 136, and there was such a demonstration as had not been observed in the halls of Congress for a generation. The House itself broke into continued cheering. The galleries were filled with the women who have devoted their lives to the greater part of them to the suffrage movement. Screaming and waving handkerchiefs and fur pieces, they refused to leave the place for many minutes.
