CASHIER TELLS HOW U.S. CAPTAIN ROBBED BANK

Badly Wounded, He Identifies Body of Officer Who Committed Suicide

FAIL TO FIND MONEY After Tragedy, Slayer Erased Bloodstains and Went to French Class

Camp Funston, Kan., Jan. 14.—Details of the manner in which Captain Lewis J. Whisler robbed the bank at the Army cantonment here and killed with a hand ax four of five men who were in the building, were told to Army officers yesterday by Kearney Wornall, who, seriously wounded, was the only survivor of the captain's fury.

For forty-eight hours, Wornall, who was cashier of the bank, had hovered between life and death. But yesterday his progress was so satisfactory to the Army physicians that they permitted him to tell the full story of the tragedy, which ended with the death of Captain Whisler, self-inflicted at the moment of detection.

It transpired that a note Captain Whisler wrote after he had decided to kill himself was addressed to a young woman at Ottawa, Kan., but Army officers are making every effort to keep secret both her name and possible relation to Whisler.

Wornall's story differed slightly from that which had previously been pieced together, as Army officers had questioned him during his infrequent intervals of consciousness. Yesterday Wornall told how he was in the bank with Captain Whisler, vice-president of the National Reserve Bank of Kansas City, Mo., John W. Jewell, editor of the Camp Funston paper, Carl Ohlsson, of Kansas City, and O. M. Hill, a clerk in the bank, when Captain Whisler came to the bank.

That Wornall knew perfectly what he was doing Saturday night when he positively identified the body of Captain Whisler as that of the officer who was present at the identification. Before the body of the Army officer was taken to the morgue, Wornall's presence, the wounded cashier asked to read from a magazine to show that he could see and understand.

Then Whisler's body, dressed in his olive-drab campaign uniform and upright in a chair, was wheeled into the morgue and placed directly before Wornall.

"That's the man, that's the captain," exclaimed Wornall, according to the staff officer's story. "Wornall then made a sworn statement that Whisler was the man who had robbed the bank and committed the murders."

After the crime, it now has been established, Whisler went to the quartermaster's office, where he removed the bloodstains from his hands and garments as they then proceeded to a class in French.

When an order came from headquarters for a report from all company commanders Saturday night, Wornall seemed to know that detection was at hand. It was then he killed himself.
