BEEKEEPERS TO MAINTAIN STOCK

State Inspector Issues Some Valuable Suggestions About Their Care

"Because of the very bad condition in which bees have come through the winter, the beekeepers should do everything possible to carry them safely through the spring months, always being hard on bees, and a special effort must be made to build them up so that they will take as good advantage as possible of the white honey harvest which comes in June," says George H. Rea, Chief Apiary Adviser of the State Department of Agriculture.

As soon as the weather is warm enough so that the bees can fly, all colonies should be examined, and those that are living should have a winter case, with packing material placed around them, so as to help them keep up the heat that is necessary for rapid brood rearing. A little stimulative feeding will be a good thing also. This should not be begun until weather conditions are such that the bees can fly at least a quantity of syrup made of sugar and water should be given. For this purpose granulated sugar dissolved in three times the quantity of water may be used. However, cheaper grades of sugar or molasses may be used. When granulated sugar is used, the syrup is made 1 part sugar and 2 parts water, either by measure or weight.

"For feeding any of the bee feeders put out by bee manufacturers may be used, but the bees may be placed in a super in which they are placed immediately over the cluster with a handful of straw thrown in the syrup to prevent the bees from drowning in the syrup. The syrup is given the bees by placing strips across the pan, then the whole thing is to be covered up snugly with blankets or some other warm material.

"Beekeepers will be glad to know that the Federal Government has made a special arrangement to take care of their needs for sugar and other supplies. Any beekeeper desiring sugar for this purpose should write Washington, D. C., and ask for instructions as to how to get the sugar. Proper blanks will then be supplied for the purpose."

DRASTIC FOOD REGULATION IS NOW PROMISED

America Must Pay More Attention to Appeals or Live by Rule

Philadelphia, Feb. 20.—Food administration officials to-day indicated that America is approaching a period of food regulation that will savor of Prussianism—unless Americans promptly give more attention to the conservation program which is being described in detail at thousands of meetings all over the state during the food conservation drive.

Washington dispatches which tell of the absolute need for more food for Europe are echoed by officials of the United States Food Administration in Pennsylvania. One of the officials summed up the situation this way: "Lots of the people are doing all they can, but the majority, unfortunately, are not."

In a statement issued to-day, this official said: "The food administration will resist as long as possible any need for more drastic regulation of foodstuffs, having faith in the patriotism of Americans, but unless a larger proportion of the people are willing to forego such foods as wheat, flour, sugar, fats and meats, their sale will undoubtedly be restricted and they will be regulated from the source."

"What especially is an example of the Allies might have the strength of the fighting armies depended on the amount of wheat this country would ship. Mr. Hoover appealed for big wheat savings, appealed to the people of America to sacrifice their usual portions of wheat products so that the Allies might have the strength to hold back the Hun."

"Some of the people answered; others didn't. What was the result? Drastic regulation in which the good patriots were forced to participate with those who paid no attention to the Hoover request."

"What happened in the case of wheat will happen in other commodities if America does not take more seriously the critical situation which confronts this unbeaten nation."

SOMEWHERE INFRANCE WITH EMPEY

Jim—A Soldier of the King By Arthur Guy Empey Author of "Over the Top," "First Call," Etc. (Copyright, 1918, McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

(Continued) I had a fair wind, and the passage was good until I came alongside the quartermaster's shack, then the sea got rough. When I got aboard, I could hear the wind blowing through the rigging of the supercargo (quartermaster sergeant snoring), so I was safe. I set my course due north to the ration hold, and got my grappling irons on a cask of milk, and came about on my homeward-bound passage, but something was amiss with my wheel, because I ran nose into him, caught him on the rail, amidships. Then it was rebel boarders, and it started to blow big guns. His first shot put out my starboard light, and I keeled over. I was in the trough of the sea, but soon righted, and then it was a stern chase, with me in the lead. Getting into the open sea, I made a port tack and hoisted in my cove with the milk safely in tow.

Most of us didn't know what he was talking about, but surmised that he had got into a mixup with the quartermaster sergeant. This surmise proved correct. Sailor Bill was court-martialed for his mix-up with the quartermaster sergeant, and got seven days field punishment No. 1. This meant that two hours each day for a week he would be tied to the wheel of a limber. During these two-hour periods Jim would be at Bill's feet, and, no matter how much he coaxed him with choice morsels of food, he would not leave until Bill was untied. When Bill was loose, Jim would have nothing to do with him—just walked away in contempt. Jim respected the king's regulations, and had no use for defaulters.

At a special meeting held by the section, Jim had the oath of allegiance read to him. He marked his consent, so we solemnly swore him in as a soldier of the Imperial British Army, fighting for king and country. Jim made a better soldier than any one of us, and died for his king and country. Died without a whimper of complaint.

From the village we made several trips to the trenches; each time Jim accompanied us. The first time under fire he put the stump of his tail between his legs, but stuck to his post. When "carrying in" if we neglected to give Jim something to carry, he would make such a noise barking that we soon fixed him up.

Each day, Jim would pick out a different man of the section to follow. He would stick to this man, eating and sleeping with him, until the next day, and then it would be some one else's turn. When a man had Jim with him, it seemed as if what he went through, he would come out safely. We looked upon Jim as a good-luck sign, and believe me, he was.

Whenever it came Ikey Honney's turn for Jim's company, he was over-joyed, because Jim would sit in dignified silence, listening to the few-harp. Honney claimed that Jim had a soul for music, which was more than he would say about the rest of us.

Once, at daybreak, we had to go over the top in an attack. A man in the section named Dalton was selected by Jim as his mate in this affair.

The crew of gun No. 2 were to stay in the trench for over-head fire purposes, and, if necessary, to help repel a probable counter-attack by the enemy. Dalton was very merry, and hadn't the least fear or misgiving as to his safety, because Jim would be with him through it all.

In the attack, Dalton, closely followed by Jim, had got about sixty yards into No. Man's Land, when Dalton was hit in the stomach by a bullet. Poor old Jim toppled over, and lay still. Dalton turned around, and just as he did so we saw him throw up his hands and fall face forward.

Ikey Honney, who was No. 3 on our gun, seeing Jim fall, scrambled over the parapet, and, through that rain of shells and bullets, raced to where Jim was, picked him up, and tucked him under his arm, returned to our trench in safety. If he had gone to rescue a wounded man in this way he would have no doubt been awarded the Victoria Cross. But he only brought in poor bleeding, dying Jim.

They laid him on the fire step alongside of our gun, but we could not attend to him, because we had important work to do. So he died like a soldier, without a look of reproach for our heartless treatment. Just watched our every movement until his lights burned out. After the attack, what was left of our section gathered around Jim's bloodstained body. There wasn't a dry eye in the crowd. Next day, we wrapped him in a lently fixed up the milk for the dog. In appetite, the canine was a close second to Hungry Foxcroft. After lapping all he could hold, our mascot closed his eyes and his tail ceased wagging. Sailor Bill took a dry flannel shirt from his pack, wrapped the dog in it and informed us: "Me and my mate are going below, so the rest of you lubbers batten down and turn in."

We all wanted the honor of sleeping with the dog, but did not dispute Sailor Bill's right to the privilege. By this time the bunch were pretty sleepy and tired, and turned in without much coaxing, as it was pretty near daybreak.

Next day we figured out that perhaps one of the French kiddies had put the dog in the grain bin, and in the excitement of packing up and leaving, had forgotten he was there.

Sailor Bill was given the right to christen our new mate. He called him Jim. In a couple of days Jim came around all right, and got very frisky. Every man in the section loved that dog.

Center Co. Farmers Quit; Lack of Labor Is Blamed

Bellefonte, Pa., Feb. 20.—An unusually large number of farm sales will be held in Center county during the month of March, and one reason assigned by many farmers for quitting the farm is the abnormal scarcity of farm labor. They aver that last year it was impossible to get the help needed to do the work inasmuch as the demand has already been made for more intensive farming this year than last the labor question is one that will be very perplexing and to avoid the trouble of last season they are simply quitting the farm.

Others give as their reason for making public sale the exceptionally high price of everything and they realize that they will get more for their stock this spring than they will probably get in some years, and therefore have decided to sell while the selling is good, and get off the farm.

"Any lady or gentleman can darken their gray or faded hair, and make it soft and glossy with this simple recipe, which they can mix at home. To half a pint of water add 1 ounce of bay rum, one small box of Barbo Compound and 3/4 ounce of glycerine. These ingredients can be purchased at any drug store at very little cost.
