War's Industrial Phases

Washington, March 6.—President Wilson, in formally announcing yesterday the appointment of Bernard M. Baruch as chairman of the war industries board, outlined a reorganization of the board which makes Mr. Baruch the general manager of the industrial phases of the war.

Mr. Baruch becomes a centralized purchasing agent of the government, his control extending to all departments in order to eliminate the harmful practices which have prevailed under the system of competitive buying. Mr. Baruch assumes, without definite legal authority, justsuch a position as has been 'advocated by Senator Chamberlain, chairman, and the members of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs. His office corresponds definitely to the ministry of munitions urged by the Senators, except that officially he is to serve in an advisory capacity, instead of as an executive, as the Senators wished.

The President in a letter to Mr. Baruch urging acceptance of the chairmanship, stated the organization of the war industries board should remain as at present, but "the ultimate decision of all questions," except the determination of prices, should rest always with the chairman, the other members acting in a co-operative and advisory capacity. The President accordingly accepts the principle of centralized control over purchases, which members of the Senator surged as being essential to efficient conduct of the industrial and economic parts of the war machine.

continued that co-operation between Great Britain and the United States should be extremely close. On behalf of himself and his colleagues he wished publicly to pay tribute to the whole-hearted and generous devotion to prosecution of the war which governed the action of every representative of the United States navy with which they came into contact. The personnel of all ranks, he said, had the respect and esteem of the officers of the British navy. No Lack of Men or Material Concerning shipbuilding, he said there was no lack of materials at present and that there were more men in the yards, but the output reached only 58,000 tons in January, although it should have been much more. It was true the weather was exceptionally bad and also that January, owing to the holidays, always was a bad month for the output of ships. One week or one month could not be taken by itself. He expressed the opinion that February would be shown to have made nearly twice as good a record as January, although only about two-thirds of what the same yards had done previously with fewer men. The Bay Scout movement will be the theme of Scoutmaster J. H. Stine, at the Parent-Teacher conference to-morrow evening, at the Maclay street building. The A. C. Blair orchestra is to play there.

thirds of what the same yards had done previously with fewer men. Submarines were being destroyed in increasing numbers, he continued, and as the methods employed against them were developed the numbers would be enlarged still further. There was a growing reluctance on the part of German crews to put to sea. The chances that a submarine would return from a voyage in the waters around England were one in four or one in five,
