WHEAT HARD HIT BY THE WEATHER

Reports Coming Here Indicate That Much Damage Has Been Done to Grain

Reports coming to the State Department of Agriculture on the condition of winter wheat and rye are declared by the bulletin of the department to be "varying" and in some localities it is stated that conditions are anything but favorable due to the wet autumn, farm work delays and late planting.

Secretary of Agriculture Patton makes a call in the bulletin upon all local draft boards which granted deferred classification to young men who asked it because of agricultural pursuits, to see that the men who went into industrial or mining work during the winter either go back to the farms or are given another classification. The secretary urges that men who have been given deferred classification because of agriculture get back to the farms as soon as the farming season opens.

Secretary Patton says: "The farm labor situation is serious and all available hands must be given the farmer if Pennsylvania is to produce its maximum crop of corn, oats, buckwheat, wheat, rye and vegetables. The state will try to assist the farmer in every way possible and has arranged to place forty tractors in different sections to help prepare the land for the spring crops. Many agricultural claims for deferred classification have been allowed the young men of draft age, but during the winter they have drifted to the cities or to work other than agriculture. It is only just to the thousands of other young men of the state who have been called to the colors, that those allowed agricultural deferment should get back to the farms at once, and perform the farm work which gave them the deferred classification."

"I think that it should be the duty of every district draft board to go over the agricultural claims allowed, and unless all young men effected are found actively engaged in farming by April 15, they should be reclassified, placed in Class I and inducted into military service."

REDMOND, IRISH LEADER, IS DEAD

relieved the patient, but heart failure intervened Tuesday night. The physicians attending Mr. Redmond issued the following announcement: "We regret to announce that John Redmond died at 7.45 this morning. Owing to several serious attacks of illness a severe operation was faced with great courage. It had become imperatively necessary owing to an intestinal obstruction. This was relieved by the operation and for some days satisfactory progress was maintained. After a fairly comfortable day Tuesday, heart failure supervened during the night and after a few hours, Mr. Redmond passed peacefully away."

Fought For Home Rule For more than twenty-five years John E. Redmond fought for Home Rule in Ireland and for a majority of that time he was the recognized leader of Ireland's "struggle for liberty." As chairman of the Irish Parliamentary party—the Nationalists—he exerted a powerful influence in bringing about the creation of the Irish convention organized in July, 1917, to devise a system of government for the island.

When David Lloyd George, the British premier, in that year offered two methods of settling the vexed Irish question, it was Redmond who as spokesman for the Nationalists, rejected the proposition for a partition of Ireland and instead, accepted Lloyd George's alternative plan for the convocation of the Irish convention in which Irishmen of nearly all parties and creeds might meet in the effort to compose their differences and draft a constitution that would afford justice to all.

Redmond was one of the delegates to the convention which sat at various times at Dublin, Belfast and Cork in 1917 and 1918.

Born in 1851, son of W. A. Redmond, a well-known member of the British Parliament from Wexford, Ireland, John E. Redmond had sat almost continuously in the British House of Commons since 1881. There his parliamentary lights for Home Rule earned for him the sobriquet of the "stormy petrel of the House."

Educated in the Holy Woods College, Kildare, and Trinity College, Dublin, Redmond was called to the London bar in 1886, and the Irish bar the following year, but he never practiced law. He was elected almost wholly to his parliamentary and political duties. Redmond's eloquence and his grasp of parliamentary procedure won his early recognition in Parliament and when in 1891 the Irish party was disrupted, consequent on the Parnell split, he became the accredited leader of the Parnellites. In 1900 he succeeded in bringing about an amalgamation of the two leading Nationalist parties and made his position as Nationalist leader secure.

Well-Known in U. S. Redmond was well-known in the United States, where he visited in 1908 and 1910, and Australia, where in 1883 he not only performed a great service for his party in directing the collection of a fund of more than $50,000, but found a wife in the person of Johanna Dalton, New South Wales heiress and beauty.

The Irish leader's first visit to this country proved a fiasco, but his second, made for the purpose ostensibly of attending the convention of the United States Irish League, at Bala, met with great success. Following his attendance at the convention, Redmond made a tour of all the principal cities of the middle west and the Atlantic coast, delivering a series of addresses on the Irish question which were later held responsible for the British Cabinet crisis of November, 1910. The speeches brought the Home Rule question to a head. The British government took serious hold of the problem and a bill was evolved.

Accused of Being Traitor With the entrance of England into the war, Redmond immediately declined his position as squarely with the government in the earnest prosecution of the war. His position of the government won the unstinted praise of Cardinal Gibbons and the open and bitter condemnation of the Sinn Fein party, members of which at a public meeting accused him of being a traitor to the Irish cause.

He maintained his loyal position even during the exciting days of the Sinn Fein revolution, declaring the rebellion, but attributing it to a German plot in the United States. When the rebellion had been put down he used all the eloquence of which he was capable in pleading leniency toward the great mass of the rebels, and in urging a speedy settlement of the differences that had caused the revolt.

His eloquent address in the House of Commons on October 18, 1916, demanding immediate Home Rule and the release of the Irish revolutionist called forth an answer from Premier Lloyd George, in which the premier admitted that mistakes had been made in handling the Irish situation and urged all parties to unite in bringing about a solution.

John E. Redmond was a brother of Major William H. K. Redmond, who was killed while fighting under the British flag in France in 1917. Major Redmond was a member of Parliament for East Clare.
