Robin Redbreast Builds Nest Near Editorial Office Have you seen any robins yet? Well, they are here in force, unhooped, too, on their sleek, fat paunches show. One hearty, happy redbreast arrived, bag and baggage from southern climes last Saturday and began to make lodgings for himself in an apple tree which shades the big window of the Telegraph editorial rooms. A forty-mile gale did not disturb him in the least as he went industriously about owning his own home. None of that neat thing for him. In fact he had a good foundation of a home left from last year, so without any squawks about shortage of labor or material he soon made himself comfortable and is now all prepared for wife, kiddies, and a war garden or two.

McCORMICK SAYS HE WON'T RUN

Humes Looms Up Since the Sproul Declaration For the Amendment's Passage

National Chairman Vance C. McCormick declared to newspaper interviewers at Atlantic City yesterday that "under no circumstances" could he be regarded as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor of Pennsylvania. However, many Democrats have demanded to accept the statement as final and the partisans of E. Lowry Humes, United States district attorney for Western Pennsylvania, are continuing their attacks upon Acting State Chairman Joseph F. Coffey as a possible candidate, although he is booked to start as a stalking horse on the part of the machine bosses.

The uncertainty in the Democratic organization thus far has begun largely due to conditions in the Republican party. The Democratic bosses have naturally waited for the issue of the Philadelphia North American to-day say that Sproul declaration commits the Republican party to ratification of the amendment and gives the interesting information noted by Humes. In more it has been known that Sproul, the party's probable nominee for governor at the forthcoming primary, had been named by an opponent himself in favor of ratifying the Federal amendment.

PHILADELPHIA Predicted by the Philadelphia Press says in a Washington dispatch: "William C. Sproul will have as his chief plank in his platform for the Republican nomination for governor, ratification of the national prohibition amendment and a local option law for Pennsylvania." The Philadelphia Press also says that the Vares are in an embarrassing place. They are being asked by the Governor to support O'Neil. It remarks: "As fortune is rising, powers, and although Senator Penrose has tried to place his stamp on Senator Sproul the Vares are satisfied that he would be fair to them and, therefore, are expected at least to make a tentative in the primary campaign if they are not active. Whether they are active depends to a great extent upon the makeup of the ticket. Penrose does not propose to create a condition in the primaries which would make it impossible to elect Sproul in November." It is predicted that from harmony in it is predicted will prevail in Pennsylvania politics before the primary.

State to Be "Dry" The North American in discussing the Sproul declaration as committing the Republican organization to prohibition, says: "At one of the recent conferences here, it was announced that, as a result of a canvass of opinion made by Secretary Harry Baker, of the committee, at least fifty-five of the county organizations in the state are lined up strongly 'dry.' Upon this showing of antiozone strength, it was argued that the state committee should formally commit the party to ratification of the amendment. Further, a proposition was seriously considered to call upon Governor Penrose to make good his suggestion of calling a special session of the Legislature, in order to overwhelmingly ratify the amendment at once and get the liquor question out of the way. During these discussions Senator Sproul held fast to his own decision to declare in favor of the amendment. He also insisted that he would sweep the objections from his moorings. His judgment has apparently been vindicated, for from Penrose down, there has come no dissent to the declaration made by Sproul at West Chester on Saturday, in which he committed himself, and the ticket which he expects to head, to the prohibition platform. The party candidates on an issue prohibition platform, or the threats of liquor interests to run a boozing ticket on an avowed 'liberal' basis, have seemed to bother Sproul at all." McCormick Wants Peace "Penrose," a Democrat, can elect the governor in the Keystone State next fall if they get together behind the right man." Vance C. McCormick, Democratic national chairman, said to a Philadelphia Ledger reporter at Atlantic City yesterday. "The Democrats cannot win unless they stop bickering and pick the right man. I can by no means say this point, because under no circumstances am I to be regarded as a candidate. My announcement some weeks ago was given on the right man I believe Pennsylvania can be carried by the Democrats, supported by independent Republicans. There never was a state that needed more change so badly." Mr. McCormick said he was not in a position to discuss candidates and declined to express any opinion as to the merits of either of the state committee with relation to the question of prohibition. "Senator Sproul's espousal of prohibition gave me something of a jolt," he said to a reporter. "I received of Penrose standing for a dry Pennsylvania, and it is almost equal difficult to believe Senator Sproul would do anything without consulting the Senator. He may not have been correctly quoted."

NEWS OF STEELTON

TO SOFTEN WATER AT STEEL PLANT

Method Is Being Planned by Officials to Overcome Boiler Trouble

Plans are under way for softening water for use in boilers at the local steel plant, it was learned at the company's offices this morning. Definite announcement of the improvement will be made as soon as plans are completed, which will be probably next week. For a long time canal water has been used for the boilers, but this has not been satisfactory. The water is too hard and puts the boilers out of commission faster than they can be repaired. Just what method will be used in softening the water for boiler purposes was not announced, but it is understood that the water will be treated in boiler plants, which will not necessitate the erection of a building or any additions to the boiler plant. The water supply for boilers has been taken from the canal for many years, brought filtered water not being used for this purpose. According to officials, this water is entirely too hard and placed the boilers in such condition that it was impossible to keep them repaired. The repair gangs were unable to keep up with the breakdowns. It was learned this morning that the new method will be put into use as soon as the plans are completed.
