Stomach and Nerves Relieved by Eye Glasses

A short time ago a prominent physician recommended one of his patients, a lady, to come to me for eye glasses. She had suffered from nervousness and stomach troubles and medicines failed to afford relief. The doctor diagnosed her troubles to be the result of eye strain and my examination confirmed his opinion. She was fitted with proper glasses, and her indigestion and nervousness soon passed away. All stomach and nerve troubles are not caused by eye strain, but in many cases they are. In other cases eye strain aggravates the troubles, brought about by other causes. If you are suffering from headaches, stomach derangements or "nerves" it is advisable to have your eyes examined. I will make the examination, and certainly will not recommend glasses unless you need them.
