Women of Carlisle Presbytery
Meet in Old Paxton
Church

The Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the Carlisle Presbytery will hold special meetings in the old Paxton Church to-morrow and Friday.

The opening session will be held to-morrow afternoon at 3 o'clock when Mrs. Charles Park, a returned missionary from Siam, will speak. She is the missionary supported by the women of the presbytery and will, doubtless, bring a message of special interest to her hearers.

The popular meeting of the sessions will be that of to-morrow evening when Dr. W. S. Wanless, of India, will speak on "The Medical Missionary Cross in India." The business of the society will be discussed at the Friday morning meeting, at which time reports of the various activities will be submitted. In the Friday afternoon meeting there will be a special service of prayer and praise in memory of Mrs. A. J. Herr, who was the vice-president of Dauphin county.

A large delegation of representatives from the seven inclusive counties is expected to attend the conference.

GLUCK-DESTEFANO CASSELL CLUB
CONCERT PLEASURES
IN SPRING DANCE

Noted Artists Appear Before
Large Audience in Chestnut Street Auditorium

A huge and representative audience greeted Mme. Gluck and Sig. Destefano at Chestnut Street Auditorium last night. Mme. Gluck is one of the strongest attractions of the concert stage, knowing which, it was not a surprise to see the well-filled house. How splendid it would be if Harrisburg would support all worthy musical events in a like manner.

Sig. Salvatore Destefano opened the program with three delightful numbers, "Serenade," by Martenot; "Gavotte," by Scambati-Destefano; and "La Danza," by Fosse. By these numbers were all beautiful and splendidly delivered. It was not until the second group of harp solos, however, that the audience was attracted to the interesting audience. The extent of his wonderful art. It certainly was a real joy to hear compositions by standard composers so artistically presented through the medium of the harp, by so finished a performer. There is a refinement and finish in the work of Sig. Destefano, not often heard in such a small instrument. His work impresses one as that of the intellectual, poetic and scholarly musician. His playing full of melody and sentiment, he also arouses one's imagination. One couldn't imagine anything more beautiful than his interpretation of "Bourée" by Bach. It is one thing to play Bach for a body of musicians, but it is quite another thing to be able to interest and delight a multitude, the bulk of which are not trained musicians, and this he did most successfully. As a concluding number of his own beautiful program, Sig. Destefano gave us a most brilliant hearing of that technically difficult number "Perpetual Motion," by Dizi, after which he received an ovation.

Mme. Alma Gluck
Harrisburg went to this concert, however, to hear Mme. Gluck. She was superb to look upon, wearing a gown of pink and white, a perfect picture of grace and beauty. As to her stage presence, personality, etc., there isn't but one Alma Gluck. She is just wonderful. Her stage decorum is not of a kind to be copied or emulated by others, for it is just part of her, just as her voice is her own personal possession.

Interesting Program
Mme. Gluck's program was most interesting. It was varied in character, and the audience seemed to enjoy it in its entirety. The first group consisted of "Star Visions," by Rosa; "Un Moto di Gloria," by Mozart; "Amarilli," by Caccini; and "When Love is Kind," by Anon. Of course, every one knows the first song of this group, and "Amarilli" is a great favorite on big concert programs.

Her second group started with "Pagan Song," by Villan, a perfectly stunning song, splendidly presented, this being followed by "Spring Song," by Rubinstein, after which she gave us "Crepusculo," by Massenet, which proved to be the gem of this group. This was followed by "Aux Temps des Fées," by Koechlin, and "Toujours," by Ravel. Mme. Gluck's concluding group consisted of the following: "Mother Dearest," Russian; "The Three Cavaliers," also Russian, both arranged by Kurt Schindler; the familiar "Lock Lomond," and "Pipes of Dun-dee," both Scotch folk songs, and two negro spirituals, "By an' By" and "I Want to Be Ready," both of which were arranged by Harry Burleigh.

Mme. Gluck's entire program was well received. Encores were numerous throughout the program. If one might be allowed the privilege of criticism, it would be necessary to say that the one feature to mar the evening's concert was the fact that Mme. Gluck was at times inaccurate as to pitch. This was especially noticeable in the songs demanding long-sustained passages. The fault seemed to be the result of tightness and was not so apparent in the more sprightly and flexible numbers.

This was the concluding concert in the very delightful series furnished by Fred Hand, and Harrisburg has reason to thank our local manager for the delightful musical events of this season.
