Justice Frazer Wrote the Opinion Upholding Judge Kunkel

Justice Robert S, Frazer, of Pittsburgh, wrote the opinion of the Supreme Court upholding the Governor's right to make "recess appointments" of state officials rejected by the state Senate, It was concurred in by Justices Mestrezat, Stewart and Walling. After disposing of questions of practice, deciding that the proceedings had been properly brought in the name of the Commonwealth, Justice Frazer quotes the Constitution and the act creating the banking department, on the question of filling the office of commissioner, and then continues:

No Limitations on Governor

"It thus appears the Governor is thorized to fill a vacancy tempoad not "happened" during the of the Senate, though it in rose while the Senate was in, but base their argument aly on the contention that the nor could not fill the vacancy, er or whenever arising, by apg one whom the Senate had usly rejected for the office, a constitutional prayision places.

Pattison to appoint Robert Watchorn actory inspector. "That case," the ustice said, "is identical in all repects with the one now before us, not while the opinion of the attoriesy general is not binding upon this ourt, his interpretation of the quesion is strongly persuasive."

The court then discussed various asses referred to by the appellants, but decided they did not apply and a conclusion affirmed the judgment of the court below.

The Dissenting Opinion

In the dissenting opinion. Chief istice Brown, supported by Jusses Potter and Von Moschizker, kes the 'stand that such action by e Governor, if legal, would enable in the Constitution and continue en in office regardless of the appoval of the Senate. He says:

"What the Constitution forbids, ay not be done, and its inhibitions sed not always be expressed for they be regarded when they arise by excessary implication. In construging a constitution, its words are to every their popular, natural and dinary meaning. When these two ropositions are borne in mind there no escape, it seems to me, from a power expressly conferred upon it by the Constitution as a check upon the appointing power, and yet immediately after it had adjourned the Governor, in the face of its rejection of his nominee, appointed him to the office which it had just declared he should not fill. If the Constitution may be thus circumvented, the executive may do indirectly what that instrument forbids his doing directly, for he can make appointments against the advice and consent of the Senate."
