

PRESS GAG IS SEEN IN THE NEW SPY BILL

Senators Say "Rider" to the Espionage Act Will Be Muzzler

Washington, April 5.—A bitter fight developed in the Senate yesterday over a proposed amendment to the espionage act under the terms of which some Senators asserted it would be difficult for any newspaper or individual to print or utter a word of criticism of the government or any of its departments or officials without some one facing the necessity of going to prison for twenty years.

The proposition, supported by several administration leaders, was characterized by its opponents as designed to put the clamp of government control on the press and to make it subservient to those who are in power to-day. It was generally agreed to be almost without precedent in its scope.

Senator Walsh, of Montana, is the author of the amendment, which is verbatim, a statute written into law by the Legislature of Montana last year. The Senate Judiciary Committee several days ago tacked it to the end of a House bill, designed to punish persons who interfere with the sale of Liberty Bonds and reported it to the Senate with a recommendation that it pass. This action by the committee followed a closed hearing, at which the representatives of Attorney General Gregory and Postmaster General Burleson gave testimony.

Penalties Are Severe The amendment makes it criminal to "utter, print, write or publish any language calculated to bring the form of government of the United States or the Constitution of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States into contempt, scorn, contumely or disrepute, or to utter, print, write or publish any language calculated to incite or inflame, or resistance to any duty constituted federal or state authority in connection with the prosecution of the war," and provides penalties of twenty years in prison or $10,000 fine or both.

Senator Hiram Johnson, of California, in an assault upon the measure, described it not merely as a bill designed to abrogate the freedom of the press, but also "a bill that seeks to curtail freedom of discussion or criticism, and even purports to prevent one from thinking as he wishes to think."

Creel's Writings Recalled The career of George Creel, chairman of the committee on public information, was brought into the debate by Senator Walsh, of Indiana, who made it appear that Creel's editorial attitude toward the federal government before the war was such as would make a criminal of him under the terms of the Walsh amendment.

Big Power Project Sponsored by U. S. Philadelphia, Pa., April 5.—Philadelphia's industries are going to take their furnaces and boilers to the mines instead of bringing their coal to this city.

This is seen in the announcement yesterday of a gigantic project, under federal auspices, for transmission of electrical power from the mines over high-voltage wires to the great plants of this city and the nearby seaboard. It will do away with the necessity of transporting coal to the industries and may prove to be the beginning of a revolution in industrial power, it was announced.

A survey authorized by Director Garfield, of the fuel administration, yesterday in Washington is under way and great central generating plants are to be erected at the anthracite mine centers as feeders to communities within a radius of many miles.

The drill of the Harrisburg Reserves, commencing at 7:30 to-night at the City Gray's Armory, will be preliminary to a course of training to meet local emergencies which has been worked out by the commandant, Major Henry M. Stine. The plans for the Reserves do not call for any parades, but for drills on streets and on the island.

The commandant has invited any of the former members of the organization who may desire to become active again and men interested in home defense to attend the drills at the City Gray's Armory. The Reserves are making a specialty of training for riot and guard duty.

If weather is fair drills on the streets will begin and in a short time the drills will be held on the island where skirmish work will be tried out. The plan is to begin the drills on the island at the earliest date that the weather will permit.
