Life's Problems Are Discussed

By MRS. WILSON WOODROW

"Dear Mrs. Woodrow: I am a young girl married a short time. My husband's business keeps him from early in the morning until late in the evening. During his absence he does not allow me to go anywhere, not even with my own family. I have tried having several heart-to-heart talks with him on the subject. But when I try this he gets into such a rare and carries so that I am ashamed to face the neighbors the next day. My health is affected by the lack of fresh air and I am becoming very delicate. My husband is a good provider, and I have fashionable clothes.

"He stays out when he wants to, having a good time; but I can do nothing, not even the least little things, without consulting him. Still he says he loves me and would not lose me for anything.

"Is this happiness? No friends, no change, no fresh air, no money. Only a home, nice clothes and a jealous man. Do you think this is love? Or does any one? I am not complaining, only I like someone else's point of view.

"CONSTANT READER."

"Since you have asked me for my opinion, I hasten to give it to you. Your husband's views are quite out of date. They do not belong to this day and age. He apparently wants a slave, and not a wife who is companion and comrade. You may take it for granted that a person who is not willing to permit another the freedom he takes for himself, is himself enslaved. That is quite obvious in your husband's case. He is the slave of his own benighted jealousy.

"My dear girl, you are young, and considering the circumstances under which you live, it is no wonder that you are unhappy. If your statement of the case is correct, your husband has no right to expect for you or your own best interests.

"Suppose after five or ten years of this kind of life he forces you to live, he should die? What would happen to you?

"You would be about as well fitted to cope with life of the world as an ancient Chinese lady with her city, useless crippled feet. Among the capable, self-reliant women of today, you would be like a plant that has been kept in a dark cellar and suddenly cut out in a bed of hardy garden flowers.

"The sort of life you are now living is inevitably going to stunt your intellect and your initiative, your heart and your soul. You will gradually lose the power to think and act for yourself.

"Are you content to be a woman or a leech? Is this happiness? Never! It is degradation. Is this love? Never! It is the desecration of love.

"I am not complaining," My dear girl, do not take that humble submissive attitude. Complain at the top of your voice. What if the neighbors do hear your husband cursing? It is he who should be humiliated, not you.

"You are not a toy dog. You are a woman with your inalienable rights to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. A home and good clothes are very nice things indeed; but there are some things better—self-respect, the knowledge that one can stand on one's own feet and has the equipment to earn one's own living and choose one's own friends and is courageous enough to refuse to be the victim of another's tyrannical whims and impulses.

"If you keep on in the same rut you are in now, you will become more and more afraid of life. That is a calamitous state of mind.

"People are constantly repressing their real desires and hopes, because they are afraid of taking the next step. But the crown is never awarded to the timid and over-cautious. It goes to the bold and positive natures, to the people who know what they want and have the equipment to get it fairly and honestly no matter what the obstacles in the way may be.

"Why do you not say something of this kind to your husband?

"I don't care how you curse and rave, nor whether the neighbors hear you or not. That is none of my business. I have something to say to you, and you might as well listen like a reasonable being and not like a mad-mad for an angry woman.

"Like any other normal woman, I want love and a home. But I refuse to continue to accept them on the only terms you offer. Therefore, until you are willing to grant these blessings on decent, reasonable, sane

Advice to the Lovelorn

By Beatrice Fairfax
Not Much Chance

Dear Miss Fairfax: I am twenty-two. About a year ago I met a young lady two years my junior, and although I admired her immensely, I did not fall in love with her. Our acquaintance was not very long when she confessed that she was desperately in love with me and has been that way for years, long before she had been introduced to me, for she had known me by sight for many years. I have tried to talk reason and explain, but of no avail. I have tried for a year to learn to love her. Now her parents are beginning to wonder about the results of such procedure, and oftentimes have hinted at what my intentions are. Can I tell them the truth? Or ought a man marry out of sympathy? I could do almost anything to prevent the pains and heartache which will be sure to follow our parting. If I marry her, and by some trick of fate I should fall in love with someone else, what then? Can you help me?

This girl has not much chance of happiness as the wife of a man who does not care for her. Of course if you did marry her she would have the immediate satisfaction of getting what she wants. Possibly you do not know what love is. If you are looking for a romantic affair of the chills and fever sort and want to dream of a girl by night and tremble at the thought of her by day, perhaps this attitude of yours is disgusting from your own heart's real feelings for the girl you want to be so careful to guard from unhappiness. If you really think that marriage to her is all wrong for you, it will be equally all wrong for her. In that case you had better have a plain talk with her parents.

FORGET HIM

Dear Miss Fairfax: I am nineteen, my friend is the same age. We are both very much in love with the same man, but we cannot tell which of us he likes the better. He makes love to both of us when we are alone with him, and says the same thing to both. Now what we want to know is, ought one of us to break away from him? Or ought what to be done? We are both very unhappy, and our friends and yet don't want to give him up.

TWO ANXIOUS GIRLS.

What is more important than keeping the "affection" of this expert wooer is for you two girls to remain loyal to each other. Their lines are straight and simple, below the waist, but above all sorts of dainty little headings are permitted. The color scheme of this skirt is gray and tan, the pockets and belt being in tan cloth. A tailored blouse in natural color pongee adds a smart note to the skirt. Two and one-half yards 36-inch pongee are required for the waist and 3 yards 44-inch velours for the skirt, with 3/4 yard cloth for pockets and belt.

Schwab Will Direct From Philadelphia Office

Philadelphia, April 20.—Charles M. Schwab, recently made director general of all shipbuilding yards in the United States, will, with his entire force of clerks, experts and advisers, move into Philadelphia within the next week and from this city the building program will be directed.

Director-General Schwab yesterday entered upon his strenuous duties with long conferences with the Shipping Board officials in Washington. He likewise was in consultation with Chairman Bernard Baruch, of the War Industries Board, in regard to the steel supplies and the speeding up of deliveries on ship plants.

The result of this meeting was at once apparent in the rearrangement of the priority lists, giving first place to the Emergency Fleet Corporation in the deliveries of steel. In the order in which their needs will be met, steel will then be given to the Navy and plants engaged on destroyers and submarine chasers, the Army, the railroad repair work, locomotives and construction work and the rail manufacturers.

The tenth keel will be laid at Hog Island Monday. This keel will be the start of the Saluda, another of the 7,500-ton vessels named by Mrs. Woodrow Wilson. It was also announced by Admiral Bowles yesterday that eight out of the ten keels scheduled for the Merchants' shipbuilding Corporation, at Bristol, Pa., have been laid and that as soon as the steel and fabricated parts arrive the four remaining keels will be laid. Vessels already under construction at Bristol, all named by Mrs. Wilson, are the Wataga, Watowan, Wauconda, Waxahachia, Winyah, Woonsocket, Wathena and Waubesa.

One of the largest Liberty Loan rallies held at the Island is scheduled to take place to-day at noon, when all the forces at the plant will unite in an effort to double the subscription of $300,000 already made. There will be several bands to entertain the crowd and several flag-raising over new buildings in the vicinity of the administration building.

Manufacture of Wash Tubs Falls Off WHY?

Because the housewife has begun to do things in a business-like way. She knows that every time she does her own washing she really loses money. She counts up her time, soap, gas, starch, etc., and figures what she can save by using that time to shop on Monday, when the sales are on, instead of waiting and buying on Saturday when everything is at its highest. She knows that she is really out of pocket and has had all her hard work for nothing.

She now sends it to the Sanitary Family Washing Company. When it comes home all her flat pieces are finished, and the rest are ready to iron. One hour's work and her wash is finished, better than if it had been fussed with all day and really has not cost her anything as she has saved the price in other ways.

We are the family washing laundry of Harrisburg. We treat you right and our prices are reasonable.
