The pros and conso of the subject are debated at length only to result in a quandry of opinions. Finally, Professor Makeover, with his assistant, appear with their "Remodel-scope" for the purpose of helping the old maids out of their dire perplexity. The function of the scope is to transform the elderly maids into charming beauties of landing a man—a man, anything for a man.

There are twenty-six characters and great care has been exercised in the selection of the costumes. Alleged to Be Engineered by Entente to Smash German Army

New York.—A mysterious plot against Field Marshal Von Hindenburg and General Von Ludendorff, especially against the latter, alleged to be engineered by the Enutente to bring about the collapse of the German army, is discussed in a issue of the Frankfurter Zeitung, copies of which have just reached New York. The article in part fol-veloped to a considerable degree, but there are many signs that with us, too, a mood is forming which favors similar symptoms. Clarity and frankness are the best weapons in combating it.

"If there is any knowledge in official quarters of alleged intrigues by the Entente against our high command, let them be exposed for all the world to see! Away with the mysterious backstairs gossip! Let us have clear, open, unmistakable language. A stop should be put to dark hints and warnings framed in the style of detective novels.

"They only serve to increase the already existing feeling of uncertainty and distrust and make an impression of a high degree of irritation—an impression which can only do us harm, both at home and abroad.

Report in Several Papers

"Certain newspapers of pan-German or conservative complexion have just printed an almost identical report regarding alleged Entente propaganda against the person of Ifirst Quartermaster General Von Ludendorff, a report which is apt to create a sensation and anxiety. "Coincidently with the efforts of the Russian high command to undermine the discipline and the leadership of the German army, it is asserted that 'according to various reports whose authenticity cannot be questioned, the Entente is about to enact, with the tricklest means at its disposal, a propaganda against the person of General Von Ludendorff."

"The report further says the Entente intended to weaken Germany by the employment of nefarious means by making an effort to deprive us of the leader who, as the right hand of Von Hindenburg, is indispensable to the German people. The Entente hopes, it is implied, that Von Hindenburg would voluntarily retire once Von Ludendorff had fallen. As long as Von Ludendorff had fallen has long as Von Ludendorff had fallen. As long as Von Ludendorff had fallen his present place, the argument goes on, there is no thought of peace. It is added that the newest fashion of political warfare is directed from neutral countries, and that its center is in Switzerland.

"We must confess that this whole story, in its mysterious, darkly hint-

"We must confess that this whole We must confess that this whole story, in its mysterious, darkly hinting form and tenor, makes a very dubious impression upon us. If there is actually something known of Entente plans to overthrow Von Ludendorff—out with the whole truth! We fully believe the Entente capable of atempts to break our home front and, if possible, to deprive our army of its leadership; if the Entente could do these things, it would most naturally proceed to it would most naturally proceed do them.

may bring about a state of affairs in which inconvenient utterances in the German press might be branded promptly with the stigma of 'Entente propaganda.'

"This danger is the greater inasmuch as the name of the Quartermaster General lately has been dragged into the rantings of the pan-German and annexationist press which has sought to make Von Ludendorff the banner-bearer of a certain political faith.

"This might be repeated some day, and then the pan-German and annexationist press could kill all public discussion with the assertion that criticism by dissenting newspapers was 'Made in the Entente.'"
