MAY FROSTS DID LITTLE DAMAGE

Much Activity in Farming Regions, Say Reports to the State Capitol

Fears of a repetition of the early May frosts of three years ago which were expressed this week at the State Department of Agriculture seem to have been groundless as reports coming here tell of little damage done by the weather in counties which were hard hit by the early frosts of last September. Some fears were entertained for fruit crops, but the lower counties had no trouble.

From accounts there are many fruit trees which will begin to bear this year because of the systematic planting of orchards in recent years and the reports on the blossoms are very favorable. Reports coming to the State Department of Agriculture are also telling of extensive planting of potatoes among gardeners and on truck farms and that there will be large areas on general farms devoted to corn.
