Incidentally, Greek is also out, due to the fact that no students elect the study.

BEIDLEMAN WINS DOCKAGE CASE FOR UPPER END MINERS

Verdicts For Pay For Three Docked by Susquehanna Coal Company

Senator E. E. Beidleman won his suit in the Dauphin county court in behalf of three miners against the Susquehanna Coal Company which it was charged illegally withheld pay from the miners for coal mined at the Williamstown Colliery. The case was brought under the mine dockage act and has been watched by miners all over the state with keen interest. It involves radical differences between the miners and the companies as to pay.

The miners, Harvey Kinsey and James C. Miller and Edward Miller are awarded verdicts in the sum of more than $300, representing money deducted from their pay under a system of dockage used by the company in violation of the provisions of the dockage law, which provides that pay for coal be reckoned at the mouth of the mine, instead of a more or less distant breaker.

The company admitted the dockage claimed but held that the court did not have jurisdiction in view of a contract entered into between the companies and the mine union in 1903 by the provisions of which disputes of the kind were to be settled by appeal to the Board of Mediation. Testimony in court showed that where miners' tickets of credit were lost from cars on the way from the mine to the breaker the company took the coal and the miners got nothing. The company also held that the miners having signed receipts "paid in full" were therefore not entitled to contest their own signatures, but Senator Beidleman drew attention to the fact that printed on the top of the receipt was a clause to the effect that the miners might settle disputed amounts "after pay day." The company admitted also that it had refused to keep full at the mine mouth as required by the dockage act.

ECHO OF MAURICE LETTER IN PRESS

London Morning Post Central Figure in Interesting Situation

London.—An interesting situation is developing in which "The Morning Post" is the central figure. J. L. Garvin's attack on that newspaper and its military critic, Lieutenant Colonel Repington, in Sunday's issue of "The Observer" of which Waldorf Astor is the proprietor, seems to have been the opening shot in a lively skirmish. "The Morning Post" evidently intends to stick to its guns and fight until it wins or falls a victim to the censor.

The affair is of more than ordinary interest because "The Morning Post" represents a small, though powerful, group. I understand that Colonel Repington is now in disfavour with the government. Garvin's attack rallied considerable support for "The Post," including several Liberal organs.

No Military Dictator at Hand. This sentence from "The Post" "It may not be untimely to remind the public that we have fought through the war for certain principles, chief of them being expert direct military direction—that is to say, a free hand for the soldier and sailor," furnishes "The Evening Standard" with a topic for a long editorial upholding the politician. The editorial says the only alternato supreme civilian control is a military dictatorship, "dominating every department of the national life." In the opinion of "The Standard" the country is not ready for this and it has no military genius to fill the place. It adds: "We may take it then that the civilian statesman must be the final decision. His business is, of course, to surround himself with the best professional advisers, to invite their honest judgment, to be guided by them in all matters in which they are competent to advise, and when operations are decided upon, to leave the execution entirely in the hands of an expert." "The War Cabinet, of course, isn't above criticism. But the constitution provides a means for criticism of a perfectly effective kind and a means for removing a ministry which has lost the confidence of the nation."

TAX RATE INCREASED

Waynesboro, Pa., May 19.—The Waynesboro School Board, at a special meeting, decided by an unanimous vote to increase the school tax rate for this year from eleven and one-half to thirteen mills. The increase in the school tax of one and one-half mills is the same rate of increase voted by borough council at their meeting on Thursday.

NOT SURE ASQUITH IS DEAD

Asquith's ministry lost that confidence and disappeared. But it is perfectly intolerable touchiness that distinguished officers should be plotted by prejudiced people to gain political ends. "The war can only be won by good team work on the part of soldiers and politicians, acting not with antagonism but with loyal co-operation."

NOT SURE ASQUITH IS DEAD

Behind this controversy stand two warring political factions, both of which are anxious to see the victorious ending of the war, but differing widely in their means of attaining it. Unfortunately the Parliamentary debate ending in Lloyd George's victory didn't settle the question. It merely postponed it. The ministerial press is not satisfied with Lloyd George's victory is proved by its constant recurrence to the Maurice incident. Although Asquith proved a heavy liability for General Maurice, the ministerial papers are not at all sure he is politically dead, as they have called him. In fact, they treat him much as a small boy does a firecracker which sizzles and then dies, ominously quiet.
