PENNSY CHIEF COMMENDS MEN

Philadelphia Division Superintendent Points to May as Record-Breaker

The month of May on the Philadelphia Division was a record-breaker all around, and Superintendent F. W. Smith Jr., has issued a letter of congratulation and encouragement to the employees of that Division, commending them upon their good work and urging them to "stick to the job" and do still better in June.

The largest movement on any one day was on May 12, 1918, and equalled 9,173 cars; the best previous record was that of October 13, 1915, on which date 8791 cars were moved.

During the month of May, we handled a total of 365,929 cars over all humps, the highest record at G.I. Park, the Westbound Hump being 3,004 on May 20th and at Abraham Lincoln Westbound Hump, 2,708 on May 24.

War Conditions Keeping Down Building Record

Harrisburg's building record for May took another big drop as compared with construction started in the same month in 1917. While there were twenty-seven permits, the majority of these were for small garages or remodeling work, with the result that the total value of the improvements is estimated at only $29,250.

Builders in the city attribute the decrease to the lack of materials and labor due to the big demands for the enormous Government developments at Middletown and New Cumberland, and predict that with the establishing of a building restriction zone in the eastern part of the country, including Harrisburg, there will be no developments for a few months at least unless absolutely necessary.

In May, 1917, there were thirty-eight permits for work costing $103,930. Last month the largest permit was for remodeling the Union Trust Company building at a cost of $5,000 and the second largest for a one-story bungalow at 2347 Derry street to cost $4,650. A brick warehouse and a brick garage, each to cost $1,000, were among the other larger permits. During the week three permits were issued for small buildings, as follows: Remodeling 1818 North Cameron, $350; remodeling 16 Aberdeen, $100; one-story brick garage near 1429 Hibernia, $400.

Select a Good School

It never is difficult for the prospective student to find a cheap school if he is looking for it. There are a number of commercial schools in the country that offer inducements of every kind to entice the inexperienced, and on paper, schools are much alike. John R. Gregg says, "The selection of the school in which you will take your business course is of the utmost importance. Poor training will hamper you all through your business career; it may even mean complete failure. 'The best is the cheapest' applies with particular force to business education."

The fact that we have always maintained high standards is important to you when considering the school you will choose, because a quality school produces quality graduates, and quality people are always in demand.

Investigate Before You Decide

We invite the strictest investigation of our school, its methods, and its management. This school has been fully accredited by the National Association of Accredited Commercial Schools of America.
