Carlisle Attorney Dies Suddenly at Philadelphia

LIEUT. ROBERT W. IRVING - Carlisle, Pa., June 7.—Further details were received here today of the sudden death in a Philadelphia hotel yesterday of Robert W. Irving, a former National Guard officer and prominent Cumberland county attorney. He was on a visit to the Quaker City with his wife when he became ill and succumbed a short time later. Mr. Irving was a native of New York City and was for some years in the National Guard serving as a lieutenant in Company G, of the Eighth Pennsylvania, and later as a battalion adjutant. He was formerly an assistant district attorney of the county. A graduate of Dickinson College and Dickinson School of Law, Mr. Irving had a big legal business. He was a member of the Sigma Chi Fraternity, a member of the Second Presbyterian Church and recently elected to the Carlisle borough council. His wife in Carlisle, and his mother, and three sisters in New York survive.

U. S. Army Enters Its Work "With Grin on Its Face and Chuckle in Its Heart"

By Associated Press - New York, June 7.—Experiences under fire and difficulties faced by correspondents in the battle zone in France are told in a letter just received by the Associated Press from one of its correspondents with the American expeditionary forces. He also tells of the fine morale of the American troops. "But the whole business is full to the brim with excitement bred by uncertainty, and quite the most interesting thing in the world. I would not have missed a single one of the experiences I have had for a million dollars. Any front, I think, is probably the most cheerful place on earth, although nobody would ever think so. The further you get away from the lines the more gloom there is. But where shells fly and life is worth about a nickel nothing matters to anybody. A laugh or a smile is the thing. I suppose this is because the average American soldier goes into battle or into the front firmly convinced that he'll only get a wound if the luck is right and at the same time determined to forgive all about it and enjoy life. I have heard more funny stories and more laughter among our men in the line in one night than I have heard in all the rest of the time that I have been in Europe. "And they are a great crowd, these fighters of ours; whether they do their fighting on the ground or in the air. They are game to the core, cheerful, happy and have one thought only. That is: 'Kill Germans.' And they never overlook a chance. You can't beat an Army that sues into an enemy with a grin on its face and a chuckle in its heart."

U. S. CONSUL VISITING HERE TELLS OF RHEIMS SHELLING

German Shells Came Hurling Through Cathedral City; U-Boats Merely "Fourth of July Celebration"

Details of the dark days of the German advance in France during the fall of 1914 were uncovered when William Bardel, who is visiting his cousin, Mrs. Annie Sees, 119 Locust streets, recounted his experiences as United States consul to Rheims during the bombardment of that city. The courteous statesman, with hair whitened and face seamed by the experiences he had gone through, was unable to tell all the horrors of those dark days owing to the censorship over his official tongue, but the personal experiences he underwent are so graphic that he was breaking all over the city during the sixteen months he was under fire. After sixteen months of the bombardment he was transferred with his consulate to Epernay, sixteen miles away, and he remained there until he was transferred to the Azores Islands "for a rest." "But six months after I was there, on the Fourth of July, German U-boats poked up in the harbor and shelled the city of Panta-del-Jada, where I was stationed. However, after our experiences in France we regarded that as a mere Fourth of July celebration," said he. The ambassador is now visiting his cousin while he awaits appointment to a new post of duty. Previous to his seven years' service at Rheims he was consul to Bamberg, Germany. People Hid in Cellars - The consul began his recital so: "I can't tell you how often I spent those dark days, with shells flying all around, and weeks of running into champagne cellars to escape bombing, and the shells came in day and night, never knowing when it would envelop us, because I am forbidden by the government to talk officially. The members of the consulate, he said, kept a suitcase with a change of clothes at their desk all the time in order to run to a champagne cellar for safety when the shells came in too close to the consulate for pleasure. A hundred people, he said, gathered in the cellar at the beginning of a close bombardment, "sleeping on straw, with champagne kegs for seats, and often remaining for days, while members made sorties to secure supplies to relieve us of our thirst and hunger." Asked if the bombardment caused him much excitement, the consul replied, "I was too busy to notice it. Why, the last time I was interviewed by one of you newspapermen in Rheims I was catching a window in the consulate which had been broken by shellfire, with a piece of brown paper. The building across the way was in ruins with its stones blocking our street." When the consulate was finally removed to Epernay, he said, the bombs were flying all around. It is now at Paris. "A consulate on the firing line is not much good," added Mr. Bardel. The consulate had much to say in regard to the shelling of the beautiful Cathedral at Rheims. Cathedral Ruined - "From the Cathedral proper about 600 abutments, wrought of marble secured from the vicinity of Rheims into all manner of beautiful statues and replicas, extend, and these are ruined beyond all hope of repair. They were so fine and beautifully wrought that the concussion of the shells crumbled them. When I left his seven years' service at Rheims, two towers were standing up noble and erect." Of the 120,000 population, 18,000 was remaining when he left. He estimated there are now no more than 5,000. "They have their schools, churches and meetings under ground, and live there. The others have left the city." He said that the firing was continuous, every minute of the day and night, "but like everything else, the people got used to it. When the wind was blowing our way, the fire sounded very near, and we thought the Germans were coming for sure. All those who could left the city; the remainder lived in cellars." Mr. Bardel is now taking a hard earned rest after his strenuous experiences.

Real Economy in Better Merchandise

It is of utmost importance to you that we come right to the point. The woman or miss who is shopping, and perhaps desires a dress, will find one to best suit her here. Suppose for example, you were to buy the materials and have it made, it would not be equal in style or quality to one of ours for less money.

Why? Because our manufacturers are equipped to make high grade dresses. They have prepared themselves to meet war conditions, they are satisfied to maintain their same high standard at less profit and we are maintaining ours the same way.

The higher cost of labor on cheap grades have made them very much higher in price, yet the quality remains the same.

It is therefore plain to be seen that our merchandise costs you no more than inferior grades which are necessarily priced higher.
