New German Drive Aims to Place Paris Within Range of Big Hun Guns

Paris, June 8.—In an article in the Matin dealing with the recent appointment of the Paris committee of defense, Frederic Brunet, a Socialist deputy, says:

By another drive made without regard to sacrifices, the Germans, if they did not enter Paris, perhaps would not only study plans to hold the capital under the fire of long range guns, but as now, for an intermittent bombardment, but for methodical, permanent fire.

Would Imperil Industrial Life "Such conditions," the deputy adds, "would render industrial life impossible, and the government's will to resist must not be influenced by the fear of sacrificing the lives of non-combatants or by fear of the consequences which a cessation of the output of the munition factories surrounding the capital would entail."

The committee in question, whose duty it is to defend the Paris area, will not only study plans to meet the threat of invasion, which is regarded as improbable, but will deal with the problems caused by night raids and the long range bombardment, says a Havas Agency review of the committee's work which summarizes the newspaper comment.
