Series of Accidents to Adams County Children

Gettysburg, Pa., June 17.—The past week has been one of a series of accidents for three little ones who live about two miles from Gettysburg and within a radius of about a mile from each other. The children range in age from about 9 to 13.

The first accident happened to Grace Sullenberger, who tramped in some glass, cutting her foot rather severely. The same day while out again she tramped on a nail, the nail going in the foot to a considerable depth. The next day she was out on the farm after some cattle, when a bull gored her in the leg twice. Just how the girl escaped from more serious injury by the animal is a mystery.

The next in the series happened to rious injury by the animal is a mystery.

The next in the series, happened to Norman Rudisill, a 9-year-old boy. He was hunting eggs in a field when he received injuries which may cost him the loss of a foot. The lad was in a field in which the grass was being cut by a power mower and the lad, being hidden in the tall grass, was caught by it. The sharp knives cut through the fiesh, ligaments and bones of his left foot. Local medical attention was given and the boy then removed to the hospital at York.

The other unfortunate one was George Williams, who ran two prongs of a hay fork in his leg just above the knee while working about the farm on which his parents live.
