HUN BARBARISM SENDS 12 NURSES TO OCEAN GRAVE

Wanton Deliberation Marks Torpedoing of Vessel Outbound From Canada

London, July 2.—A German submarine, seventy miles from the Irish coast, on the night of June 27, torpedoed the 11,000-ton hospital ship Llandovery Castle, which had been chartered by the Canadian government and had been in the service of carrying wounded and sick from England to Canada for many months past. The ship was then on her way to England. She had on board 258 persons, including eighty men of the Canadian army medical corps and fourteen female nurses.

Up to the latest reports, only twenty-four of those on board, including the captain, had survived the treacherous attack, which came without warning. The submarine commander, who ordered the captain of the Llandovery Castle, several of his officers and Major Lyon of the medical corps, aboard, declared that he had sunk the ship because she was carrying American aviation officers and others in the fighting service of the Allies. He added to this later by asserting that the vessel was carrying munition stores, because of an explosion which had occurred after burning when the Llandovery Castle was torpedoed. These included a huge electric cross over the bridge and strings of white and green lights on either side. The Red Cross on the sides of the vessel also were illuminated by electric lights.

Boat With Nurses Capsize One boat, in which there were twelve nursing sisters, was seen to capsize. The sisters were thrown out and either were drowned directly or caught beneath the boat. A Canadian sergeant, who was in the same boat, managed to crawl on the keel. Nothing had been seen of the remaining five boats. Whether or not they had been destroyed by shell fire, the commander of the Lysander could not say. The submarine was observed charging wreckage, on which might have been survivors, and in the locality where it was likely some of the boats were drifting.

The Admiralty report on the sinking describes the urgent treatment of Major Lyon and declares that the submarine, after sinking the vessel, shelled an unknown target, which it intimates might have been the missing boats. The captain's boat, containing the survivors, was picked up by the destroyer Lysander, the commander of which has reported that he had found no trace of the remaining five boats. How the little craft with the nurses was swamped is described. Not far from the stern of the sinking vessel, the latter sank stern first, the boat was carried down by the whirlpool created. The commander of the Lysander, describing the ferocity of the submarine commander, said:

Subofficer Brutal "The Canadian sergeant was dazed with the buffeting he had received and was badly bruised. When the overturned boat got near the submarine the sergeant climbed aboard in a very exhausted condition. He thought it was a rescue, but he was seized by one of the submarine's officers and thrown back like a handbag. The commander, in a general review of the circumstances, says that Captain Sylvester knew nothing about a submarine being in the vicinity. He did not at first realize that he had been torpedoed. He could not use his wireless and tried to get the emergency signal to work, but there was no time. "After the submarine charged into the wreckage," says the commander, "from what I have heard I firmly believe that the submarine tried to ram the survivors' boat, and thought it had done so.

"As far as can be ascertained, one stoker was observed to jump overboard just as the ship was disappearing. We have since been cruising in the neighborhood, but not a single speck of wreckage of any kind was seen. Neither have we been able to find any trace of the missing boats."
