Again, shortly after the battle of Verdun started, the French railroad, which was to furnish many of the supplies to the troops, was destroyed. The French Government, however, had a macadam road thirty-two feet wide, on which four lines of traffic, two in either direction, were maintained. Day and night 14,000 motor trucks carried men, and equipment.

The traffic never stopped. When a hole was made in the road, a man with a shovelful of rock slipped in between the line of trucks and threw the rock into the hole, then jumped aside to let the trucks roll the rock down.

It was returned to the artist who executed a new likeness. The portrait of John M. Reynolds, lieutenant governor with Mr. Tener, was placed in the lieutenant governor's suite some time ago. A fine portrait of Dr. Henry Houck, the late secretary of internal affairs, was also placed a short time ago in his department. The portrait of the governor and lieutenant governor who will retire next January will be painted next year.

Reports coming to the State Department of Health indicate that there was very little if any tetanus reported in Pennsylvania following the Fourth of July. The reports are not complete, but all signs are that there was less observance of the day by means of explosives of various kinds than for a long time.

It is not generally known that Me-It is not generally known that Mc-Connellsburg, the Fulton county seat, which has invoked the aid of the State Public Service Commission to prevent the closing of the Western Union telegraph office in that town, has been a station on telegraph lines for almost three quarters of a century. Its location at the foot of the Tuscarora range, which is over 2,200 feet high in sight of the county town, made it a good place to go through and for a station. In fact when storms ranged the Alleghennies the linemen always kept an eye on McConnellsburg.

The busiest hour these days in Western Union office in Harrisburg is just about dawn. The order of the Bell Telephone Company suspending its information service on the hour of the day or the time has piled it up for the long suffering Western Union. The men at the office, who are rushed with an enormous increase of business, mainly government, have to hustle to the telephone to give people the time many times between midnight and 6 a. m. The Pennsylvania railroad people are also getting their share of the inquiries.

ago this day was given notice here. There were few parts of Pennsylvania in which gratitude for French aid in the Revolution was stronger than right around here, the distribution of the son of the French king and the city almost became Louisburg. When the French revolution occurred the sympathies here were naturally with the people and the fall of the Bastile was celebrated for a number of years.

It's a pretty far cry until the next It's a pretty far cry until the next legislature meets and it will be a good six months before the law-makers to be elected in November come here again for business, but there are already steps being taken to prepare bills for the general assembly of 1918. This is indicated by the inquiries coming here and it would seem that there are a number of men who have ideas of regulating things. However, there will not be many laws next year and the big legislation will be that recommended by the new governor and the comby the new governor and the commissions which are at work.

The two never played on the same teams in years gone by, but they played against each other. In his day Wood was somewhat noted as a speedy base runner and he was noted for the way he stole second. The other day Wood was asked if he knew the new commissioner.

"Yes," quoth he, "for a long time. He was one of those who used to nall me at second."

Judge McClure caught for some famous teams in his younger days and used the money he earned to study law and some of the old timer recall how active he used to be behind the bat.

The Capitol plaza and the Mulberry Street bridge were put into the discard last night as the windlest places in Harrisburg. They have divided that honor for a long time and many a man and woman is disposed to accept such judgment without further contest. The new place was registered by a man who had heen working on top of the Penn-Harris. He said that to his certain knowledge there had been more wind in the valley of the Susquehanna the last month than he had ever known and it seemed to center about the new hotel.
