U.S. AND ALLIES WILL KEEP ROAD TO RUSSIA OPEN

Uninterrupted Communication Through Kola and by Rail to Petrograd, Plan

Washington, July 9.-It is possible to state at least one definite conclusion with respect to the allied and American policy toward Russia. The road to European Russia must be kept open to the allies. That is the road which leads through the port of Kola, on the Arctic Ocean, nd by railroad direct to Petrograd

The port is now in the hands of allied and American naval und marine forces, which are extending their sphere of influence southward along the Murmansk raftpoad. The Germans, knowing full well the danger to their plans so long as the road is open to the allies, are citivated in the conference port. It is the German plan to solate Kola if they cannot capture that ice-free port. It is the German plan to surround European Russia so far as it is possible to do so—to cut off the Russians from all connection with the remainder of Europe and leave open only the long-distance route through Siberia to Vladivostok. The encircling band of German steel may extend even that far if something is not done to prevent it.

'Garrison Must Be Strengthened Whatever steps may be necessary to keep the Kola gateway open will be taken. That will involve first of all the rapid strengthening of the somewhat meager garrison already in the direction of Petrograd. Already committed to the Kola project, the United States will participate in the further operations there, and developments of to-day will tender to confirm dispatches that the conference at the White House Saturday afternoon was taken up largely with a discussion of the Kola stuation.

There were persistent and interesting reports Saturday evening that decisions reached at the conference might go beyond the Kola project, but those have not been confirmed.

Germans Driving Toward Kola
The Germans are driving ahead oward Kola. The latest reports indicate they will demand of the Bolshevik government the free passage of German troops through Petrograd in the direction of Kola. If the Bolsheviki grant the request it will show how completely they are under the influence of the Germans, and it also would be interpreted as lending aid to the Germans in their avowed attack upon the allied defenders of the only port through which European aid can be sent to Russia. The fruits of such an act well may be imagined.
While dealing with his Cabinet officers and the chiefs of naval and military operations on the specific subject of Kola. President Wilson is continuing to keep his own counsel regarding the larger aspects of the Russian situation. He is maintaining the reticence which marked his Fourth of July address. There has been such wide speculation throughout the country concerning what the ultimate policy of this country will be that the President is being urged anew to discuss the subject.

Secretary Lansing said last evening:

'The Russian situation is in such snape that I can say nothing respecting it at the moment."

No Anxiety Regarding Francis
While momentous events are transpiring in Russia, including the assassination of Count von Mirbach, the German ambassador, at Moscow, the State Department remains without advices of any sort from Ambassador Francis, at Vologda. The last telegram from Mr. Francis was dated June 24, two weeks ago. There have been other long periods of interruption of communication, however, and no anxiety is felt.

Shirt Tails in Danger

Washington, July 9.—The war on nonessentials of dress has be-gun. The War Industries Board has fired the opening gun by plac-ing women's hightop shoes under the ban.

ing women's hightop shoes under the ban.

This is only the beginning of the War Industries Board's campaign for economy in dress during the war. A well-defined plan of saving many needed materials is being formulated by the board. The unnecessary frills of dress may be eliminated for both sexes before the war has progressed much further. It is not revealed what further articles of apparel are to be attacked.

It is rumored that the linencollar is in jeopardy, that shirt tails may be shortened, the number of pockets in suits reduced and other useless features of dress which means extra materials eliminated.
