B. C. WALLACE IS NOW IN FRANCE

Former Coach at Academy Writes to His Parents in Philadelphia

Brenton C. Wallace, formerly coach at the Harrisburg Academy, is now a lieutenant in the field artillery in France. In a recent letter to his parents in Philadelphia he said: 'We will need more men and more men, more provisions. So let there be no slackening at home.'

'But don't be worried and don't lose faith,' he continues. 'We are going to win and win gloriously. America is only beginning to fight. Truly, as President Wilson has said, it is not simply a war of armies, but a war of whole nations. Everything that those at home are doing is helping just as much as what we over here are doing.'

Lieutenant Wallace makes emphatic mention of the enthusiastic reception tendered the Americans. 'The women and children go frantic and wave and cheer as our trains go by. The factory whistles too and hold the tiny pink baskets of applause and many wave American flags. One old trainman seemed to much overcome to wave so he stood at the rear of the train and saluted while our long train swept by.'

GERMAN CRITICS CHANGE TONE AS U. S. SPEEDS UP

Press Breaks Silence, but Seeks to Minimize Peril

Washington, July 13.—The German press has been forced by American military intervention in France to abandon its inspired policy of silence regarding the activities of the United States, according to a dispatch from an entente government source received here yesterday. It quotes the admissions of a noted military critic, saying: 'Very characteristic are the confessions which Stegemann, the Germanophile military critic, was obliged to make in the Bund of Berne. Their tone is no longer the same as it was. If the war,' he declares, 'does not end in 1918, it is no longer possible to assign a term to it, either from a political or military point of view. The allies are awaiting the battle with growing confidence. They still have reserves at their disposal and the multitude of American reinforcements supplies them with moral guarantees.'

Admits Underestimating Us 'In regard to the importance of this aid, Stegemann confessed that his last estimates already have been exceeded. 'We estimated,' he said, 'the Americans at 500,000 fighting men. We are obliged to add that these figures are rapidly rising. The first million already have been exceeded. The most difficult problem consists in preparing this mass for mobile warfare. The English, who have improved with astonishing success the setting up of several million men, have experienced this difficulty. But is the French army, with its highly trained headquarters staff, its excellent officer corps, its troops full of suppleness and quick at adapting themselves to existing circumstances, which provides the brain and marrow of military resistance for the entente? The forces of the German army will find themselves faced by French, British and American troops. The new battle will bring the decision nearer. But can the political consequences be foreseen? That is another question. 'Thus Stegemann, like Von Kuehlmann, acknowledges that he no longer believes in a decisive German victory.' The dispatch states that 'for a long time the German papers have been silent about the entry into line of the American troops.' It continues: 'The role played by these troops in the beginning of June in the region of Chateau Thierry in the very center of the battle, has not permitted the press to continue in that attitude. It is forced to try to dispel the growing anxiety of public opinion by stating that the figures furnished by enemy telegrams are incorrect.

People Are Still Deceived 'That is what the official commentary is trying to make people accept. One communicant has tried to prove in a clear way that the news spread by the French radio telegrams about the arrival of 1,000,000 American troops constitutes a gigantic piece of bluff. The Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung said even if the statement were verified there would be no occasion for alarm, since it is only a matter of time before the Allies will be able to send more troops. All the papers conform more or less to the tone of the official press. Some of them, however, have succeeded only in hiding their real anxiety. Others confess that the action of the United States is more rapid than was expected and may impede the success of the German arms. In the Berliner Tageblatt of July 9, Theodore Wolf remarks that 'America's help is augmenting the morale resistance of the enemy peoples.'

'The fears which necessarily impose on the Germans, of continuing a struggle against a fresh and ardent army, are contributing to the official efforts to control public opinion, which has been very sensitive of late.' Gruening Out as Chief of Tribune Staff; He Doesn't Know Dr. Rumely

New York, July 12.—Newspapers today published an announcement that Dr. Ernest Gruening had ceased his connection as managing editor of the New York Tribune. Ogden Mills Reid, publisher of the Tribune in confirming reports of Dr. Gruening's retirement, said: 'The reasons were purely internal.' Dr. Gruening speaking of the affair and the fact that he lived in the same apartment house as Dr. Edward Rumely, formerly of the Evening Mail, now under charges of perjury in connection with the ownership of the Mail, said war had nothing to do with his leaving the Tribune and so far as Dr. Rumley was concerned, declared he 'did not know the man and had never spoken to him.'
