Harrisburg continued to-day to swelter in the trough of the heat wave that visited its unwelcome presence on the city and its people. No break with any great promise of relief is visible.

lief is visible.

No Relief Promised

The mercury may be a few degrees lower to-morrow, and a few degrees only, but no definite promise of reflect can be held. Local showers may come to Harrisburg within the next twenty-four hours to relieve the local condition somewhat.

At 1 o'clock to-day Forecaster Demain's observation revealed the thermometer hanging at the 90-degree point. The promise then was that it would reach the 93-degree mark before the afternoon was ended.

Ninety-three degrees was the high water mark of yesterday. And incidentally this was the hottest July 22, but one, in the history of the Harrisburg Weather Bureau. The only 22 hotter than yesterday was that of 1894 when the mercury reached 94 degrees.
