

Reading for Women and all the Family

Life's Problems Are Discussed

BY MRS. WILSON WOODROW
There seems to be a mental law to the effect that whatever greatly occupies the mind is almost certain to take form in the objective.

For instance, you may come across a word you are not familiar with. To the best of your knowledge you have never heard it nor seen it before, and yet after your discovery of it you will remember it again and again.

This fact has recently come home to me in an odd sort of a way. I have been doing a great deal of reading and research on a subject which has interested me and yet which would certainly never be classed as live news matter.

You can easily follow the workings of this law, whatever it is, down to the smallest details. A friend came to see me a day or two ago and stood transfixed upon the threshold of my sitting room.

"Flowers!" she exclaimed. "Reses?" There was such horror in her tones that I thought she was reproving me for buying anything but Thrift Stamps.

She explained, however, that she was suffering from some cold, which afflicts those who are subject to it at the same time each year just as hay fever does. "It comes in June," she said.

"It's a rather rare disease, isn't it?" I asked after I had whisked my flowers out of sight. "Not at all," she replied. "Very common. Every other person I meet has it."

Now I meet just as many people as she does during the day, perhaps more; and yet with the exception of herself I know no one who suffers from this ailment.

Again, why is it, that if we find our thoughts turning persistently to some particular person we are very apt to hear from him or meet him within a short time? We may not have given him a thought for months or years, and yet "behold, his shadow on the floor."

I know there are various explanations for these phenomena, but none of them is entirely satisfactory. The effect, however, is as if we unconsciously to ourselves, sent out wireless messages into the universe and received the responses. Like seeks like.

May not this account for the fact that people with grievances are always well supplied with material for their diatribes?

Bringing Up Father

fresh ones; that the mournful people have plenty to mourn about; that that most dreadful of pests, the man or woman with a chip on the shoulder, invariably arouses a burning desire in the breast of the meek and innocent bystander to knock it off.

We all know people who are just naturally lucky. Everything seems to come their way. They don't have to climb trees and laboriously pick the fruit off the branches. They merely stretch out a hand and the plums fall into it.

I heard a woman complaining of the inequalities of fate recently and comparing her lot with that of an acquaintance. "Just look at her," she said.

"I've I have worked and worried and schemed and contrived for years. Anything that I get comes by the hardest kind of effort and usually after a thousand disappointments. But she, while not half so clever as I, nor so diligent a worker, is yet a sort of magnet attracting to herself the good things which go past me. There's no such thing as justice."

But she affirmed the justice of the law even while she decried it. I knew the lucky woman as well as I knew the unlucky one. The difference between the two was that one was always expecting the worst and preparing for it, and the other looked forward to agreeable and pleasant things. She took them as a matter of course and made them welcome. It was always the top of the morning to her.

There are days which are well known to all of us, when everything goes wrong. There is certainly no mauling power that is trying to thwart us and make us miserable, although it is often easier to believe so than to understand why one disturbing circumstance should follow another from early morn to dewy eve.

But the reason probably is that we get fussed over the first jolt or our apple cart; then we hastily sent out invitations to all the petulant, nervous, worried thoughts in the ether about us, and they hastened to our side and assisted in upsetting the apple cart and making a complete wreck of it before the day was over.

FASHION'S FORECAST

(By Annabel Worthington)

The smart simplicity of this type of waist finds immediate favor with the American woman, who can wear it most successfully. The crisp shawl collar is fashioned of white linen, and the cuffs correspond. The waist has a shoulder yoke which is more shallow at the front than at the back.

The lady's waist pattern No. 8861 is in six sizes—34 to 44 inches bust measure. The 36 inch size requires 1 1/2 yards 36 inch or 1 3/4 yards 40 inch with three-eighths yard 36 inch contrasting material. Price 5 cents.

This pattern will be mailed to any address upon receipt of 12 cents in stamps. Address your letter to Fashion Department, Telegraph, Harrisburg, Pa.

Use Dynamite to Blow Up Great Old Tree

An almost deafening report aroused the inhabitants of Paxtang from their peaceful avocation of farming and gardening a few days ago, and men, women and children flew to the churchyard, which seemed to be the scene of carnage.

The tree was not far from the historic Easton Church and was blown down in the storm of May 10. It was thirteen feet in circumference and sixty feet tall. About five feet from the base it was rotted for a large space, and although in full leaf was readily felled by the wind.

Now the work of sawing and cutting is going merrily on and there will be from eighteen to twenty cords of wood, which is being sold.

WIFE OF ACTOR ASKS FOR $25,000

Endearing Letters Relieve Tedium of Alienation Case Against Saylor's Widow

New York.—"I'm a woman fluttering between heaven and hell, and afraid to let go," wrote Mrs. Josephine Saylor, then the wife, now widow of E. B. Saylor, former vice-president of the Western Union Telegraph Company, to Charles Campbell, a well-known comedian, whose wife, Catherine, is suing Mrs. Saylor for $25,000 damages, charging alienation of his affections.

Herbert F. Miller, counsel for Mrs. Campbell, said his client has in her possession a sheaf of letters written by Mrs. Saylor to the actor. The correspondence between the two began last fall and included a letter written March 15, the date of Saylor's death, acknowledging the comedian's condolences.

"Will endeavor to see you soon, perhaps next week," wrote the sorrowing widow, concluding a letter which was composed chiefly of a recital of her poor physical condition, due to the "sudden shock."

In her complaint, Mrs. Campbell says that she and her husband lived happily from their marriage, May 30, 1904, until about September 1, 1917, when, she alleges, he fell under the influence of Mrs. Saylor. Since that time, she declares, he has treated her with indifference and contempt.

Some of the letters written by Mrs. Saylor from her home in Brooklyn to Campbell follow, in part: "Jan. 11, 1918.—Charles: Do you hear? The awakening is near. Oh, how my heart and hand tremble when I think of you, dear. O Lord, had you cast me back from death's door to try to win back a man's soul that is nearly won, for surely when I want to live Christ seems at hand to stay my passions and to circumvent me."

"While denying that he and other American purchasers of the controlling stock were 'dummies,' serving for German interests until after the war, Mr. Hamann confessed to the Scheide-Anstalt Company, of Frankfurt, which until the date mentioned held 55 per cent. of the stock. Control was given to American citizens by the sale of seven per cent. of the holdings, at prices which the alien property custodian alleges were below their value."

To contradict the claim of Hamann and Seltz that the German shareholders were willing to sell at a sacrifice to insure retention of the property by the Americans, who had represented them, the government offered in evidence a letter from Dr. Fritz Rossler, a principal in the Scheide-Anstalt Company, to Mr. Hamann, which said: "Rather than accept genuine sale at inadequate prices, would let the worst come and trust to a fight for our rights in free America."

The letter was mailed at Frankfurt only two months before the sale of control, which involved almost $1,000,000.

Ways to Win the War Enumerated by Labor Dept.

The United States Department of Labor has sent out circulars emphasizing the need for men to stay at their jobs in order to aid in the prosecution of the war. Declarists that the way to win the war is for every man to remain on his job and speed up, the bulletin says: "The way to win the war is for every one of us to work a little harder at our present jobs. This applies to all of us, whether rich or poor, men or women."

"Every idle hour helps the Kaiser in his damnable attempt to enslave the world. Wherever we are, or whatever we are doing, let us do our work a little better. "Even if we are not on war work, or helping the Government directly, we can help release others for such work by speeding up on our own jobs."

"Jan. 24, 1918.—Dear: I have proved to you that I love you. This should be clear. Havn you proved her love for a man like you, says a woman who has sacrificed her life, his whole kingdom, his whole court, and all things for a man who sacrificed for woman, for superwoman."

"Yes, I am a superwoman and you are a superman. Of course, I know myself. I know you and surely know myself. You have yet to know, to realize what this means. But beware; the realization is too great, it dare not be. You heart is not torn, but to know superwoman is too much for man."

Use McNeil's Pain Exterminator—Ad. "Before going to bed I had a little Parisian sage, into my scalp. For it was a woman whose luxurious soft and shiny hair was greatly admired. This keeps my hair from being dry, brittle or scraggly, helps it to retain its natural color and makes it make it easy to dress attractively."

Beautiful, soft, glossy, healthy hair, and lots of it, is a simple matter for me. I know you and surely know myself. You have yet to know, to realize what this means. But beware; the realization is too great, it dare not be. You heart is not torn, but to know superwoman is too much for man."
