Wilmington, Del.—In a letter to his parents in this city, Private Leonard Thompson, general headquarters, Light Railways and Roads, A. E. F., inclosed copies of posters warning against German poison gas. "It's the old U. S. stunt of adventuring and putting the grin into the fight," is the comment of Thompson. The posters read:

There are three things to do when Fritz sends it over: 1. Hold your breath. 2. Get your mask on quick! 3. Warn your pals. Don't take a chance; if you do, you'll never take another. There are two kinds of men. The quick and the dead. Which one are you? Don't be a dead one.

To talk with your mask on: 1. Take a deep breath. 2. Remove your mouth-piece. 3. Talk naturally into your face-piece until your breath is exhausted. 4. Replace your mouth-piece and breathe again.

The hard-boiled guy said gas was "bunk". Said it was harmless, only stunk; and that the cock-eyed world he'd tell. That all gas masks could go to—well. They sent hard-boiled up to the line. Fritz spilled the "mustard" good and fine. And yet some folks still wonder why 'Twas "flowers" for the hard-boiled guy.

It's all right to cook with gas, but who wants to croak with it? Get that mask on quick!

Determined to Settle Embezzlement Charge Against J. R. Bennett

Determined to settle the case against J. Robbin Bennett, a colored attorney charged with embezzlement, counsel for the prosecutor to-day asked President Judge George Kunkel for a writ on District Attorney Michael E. Stroup to show why the suit should not be disposed of in the alderman's office upon the payment of the costs and the refund of the money which Bennett is alleged to have misappropriated.

Judge Kunkel promptly refused the rule stating that he would not establish the precedent of making an order of that kind against a prosecuting officer of the court. He suggested that Fred C. Miller, attorney for the prosecution, arrange to present the petition when the district attorney is present and then arrange for an argument of the case.

Mr. Miller in his petition states that the case can be settled according to law upon the payment of the costs and the refund of the money to his client, but that District Attorney Stroup in a letter to the alderman who heard the suit, directed it should be returned to Quarter Sessions Court. Judge Kunkel remarked that in case it is brought up for jury trial the fact that all costs had been paid and the prosecutor had backed in full would constitute a complete defense.
