Progress Protests Against Poor Water Supply

Residents of the village of Progress to-day protested to the Public Service Commission against the failure of the Susquehanna Water Company, of this city, which operates in Susquehanna township, to furnish a regular supply of water. It is charged that it has "repeatedly" failed to maintain its supply, gives no notice of failure and thereby endangers health and property. The complaint is the climax of conditions the last month and will be sent to the company for a prompt answer.

The commissioner of Radnor township, Delaware county, complained that under the new schedule of the Springfield Consolidated Water Company, of Philadelphia, for fire service it has to pay an increase of 1180 per cent. The increase is alleged to be due to the inclusion of a charge for pipe lines.

Residents of White Haven complained that the White Haven Water Company refused to extend water mains.

Hold Ream Family Reunion at Reservoir

An interesting event in the social whirl was that of Saturday afternoon at Reservoir Park when the members of the Ream Family held their annual reunion there.

More than 200 members of the family attended the gathering and enjoyed a delightful time afforded by the pleasures of the park, the dinner and supper en famille, and the keen, nappy spirit of Auld Lang Syne.

During the course of the day the members gathered for an informal meeting on one of the sloping terraces where N. W. Ream the president, read a paper on the Reams clan from its stilted records found in the eleventh century until the present day when the family claim representative members in practically every state in the Union.
