CHAPTER XIV (Copyright, 1918, by King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

On the morning after Jim went to Washington, I woke to the loneliness of my room in the Walgrave with a full consciousness...

in town for the day and would meet me for lunch at the Rochambeau... I telephoned to discuss the advisability of inviting my pretty tenant to lunch...

To order breakfast sent up to our room seemed impossible. To breakfast in the cold formality of the Walgrave dining room was more impossible...

At 10 there came a telegram: "Arrived safe, fine trip, write later; hope you are well, Jim."

Advice to the Lovelorn

WHEN THE MAN IS YOUNGER DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

Some time ago I became friends with a boy of 20. He is a fine boy, good character, fine disposition and holds a splendid position...

The Kaiser always seemed to take a particular interest in American affairs, and while he professed to despise our form of government...

He accused Mr. Wilson of discriminating against Germany, he made the remark: "Wilson's in the hands of the Wall Street group!"

My face flushed, I suppose, at this insult to our President, and my resentment was so apparent that the Kaiser immediately patted me on my right shoulder and apologized.

"What I admire about Mr. Roosevelt," he said, "is the fact that he has the greatest moral courage of any man I ever met."

I saw the Kaiser shortly after Mr. Wilson's election. "I'm very much surprised at the result of your election," he declared...

"I beg your pardon, Davis," he declared, in a quieter voice. "I know you're an American and I beg your pardon for hurting your feelings."

There was no man of modern times whom the Kaiser seemed to admire so much, before the war, as ex-President Roosevelt.

"I hear his shower praise on Roosevelt many times and I haven't the slightest doubt that he was quite sincere."

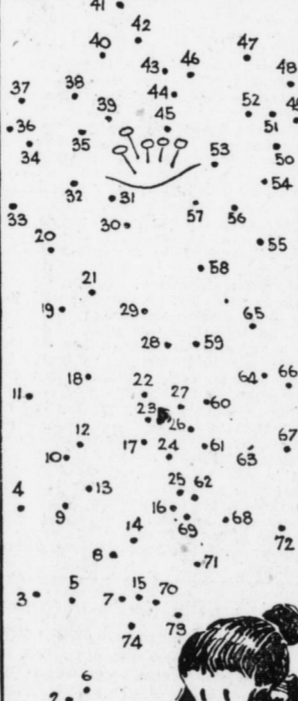

Just what brought about the allusion to throat-cutting I haven't the slightest idea. It is possible that his conscience was beginning to hurt him...

The Kaiser's rage was so significant of the distress our intervention caused him as to be impossible for me to restrain them much longer.

"My officers are becoming so incensed at America's attitude," he said, "it will be impossible for me to restrain them much longer."

"What I admire about Mr. Roosevelt," he said, "is the fact that he has the greatest moral courage of any man I ever met."
