CRASHING THROUGH TO BERLIN. A Wonderful Picture Showing Important Battle Scenes.

It gives a sketch of the murder of the Arch Duke Francis Ferdinand, of Austria, and his consort in Sarajevo, capital of Bosnia in Serbia. Austria demands the right of a judicial inquiry in Serbian territory which Serbia refuses. Serbia is backed by Russia. Austria declares war on Serbia July 28th. Russia then mobilizes her army to protect the rights of her ally Serbia. Germany immediately declares war on Russia and demands from France a definition of her attitude on neutrality. France's reply is an order to mobilize her armies. Germany declares war on France. Germany on August 4th invades Belgium. England enters the war. After almost a year of fighting the day and Saturday matinee.

ALLIES WIN ALL GROUND LOST TO HUNS IN SPRING

ward on a front of more than 15 miles. They have driven in hard upon the left flank of the German line protecting Cambrai along the Canal du Nord, occupying the greater portion of Havincourt wood and capturing several additional towns to the southward.

French Near La Fere South of the Somme the French are reported to have effected a gain to an average of two miles on a twenty-mile front. They took the important town of Tergnier, only two and one-half miles from the Hindenburg line at La Fere, and swept over several towns northward towards the British front in their progress.

It was beyond the Oise, however, that General Petain's forces made their most important gains. General Mangin's army has a difficult task before it here where the Germans are established in the extensive forest of St. Gobain, the key point of their defensive system. The French already have pushed through the outlying lower forest of Couchy, however, and by taking Barisis have begun to press in upon the St. Gobain massif itself.

At points along this front the French apparently have reached ground beyond the former German defensive line. The official statement from Paris shows them on the edges of the upper forest of Coucy also a part of the St. Gobain bastion defending Laon, and they are unofficially reported to have pushed into a big stretch of entirely new ground in this area. The Germans are desperately resisting here.

On the Aisne the French have taken the Conde fort and Condur-Aisne whence their movement threatens the Germans who still are clinging to the river to the east along the front held by the Americans. Thus it seems that there can hardly be more than a momentary halt by the enemy here and the reports from the American front indicate the allied lines already are moving ahead, particularly to the east towards Rheims, where a movement is in progress to force the Germans out of the angle south of the Aisne where they are yet holding.

Nearly All Ground Lost In Flanders the British have gained more ground, driving in farther towards the Messines ridge, in the vicinity of the town of Messines, and edging eastward farther south towards La Bassée.

As a whole, through the campaign inaugurated by Marshal Foch on July 18, and in particular through the Franco-British drive during August, the German stroke of March 21 has now been virtually canceled. The Germans have been pushed from all the territory they conquered by the great offensive they opened on that date except for a narrow strip between La Fere and Cambrai.

Along his old line the enemy now is facing an allied force that is under a unified command and that instead of somewhat fearfully awaiting a powerful German stroke is on the aggressive and powerfully reinforced by the imposing mass of American forces that has been transported to France since the early spring.

HASTE marks the flight of the Germans all along the battle front from the river Aisne to the old enemy defense before Cambrai. The Allies now are within striking distance of Cambrai and St. Quentin, while La Fere is in more immediate danger and Laon is within range of French guns.

Americans Along Aisne On the Aisne front the French and Americans have reached a critical stage in their advance and indications point to a stiffening of the German defense in an effort to stave off the evacuation of their strong positions on the Chemin des Dames. The Americans occupy positions in the woods and hills south of the river Aisne on an extended front. On the Americans' left the French have taken Coucy-le-Chateau and are in possession of their old trenches dominating the Chemin des Dames. At this point the French are approaching positions of vital importance to the Germans if they plan to further resist the allied pressure towards Laon.

French Hold Ham In the Noyon sector the French now hold the important junction point at Ham and the further retreat of the Germans in the direction of British Advance Near Peronne at Night. Peronne captured the towns of Hancock, Sorel-le-Grand, and Metz-en-Coutures, says to-day's war office announcement. Fighting their way towards the left flank of the German positions along the Canal du Nord from Havincourt northward, the British penetrated the western part of Havincourt wood, taking prisoners as they progressed. In Flanders the British are pushing towards Messines, near the southern end of the Messines ridge, and advanced their lines last night a short distance in the direction of the town.
